Preface by the General Editor

EXCEPTING the Kaipūra-mañjarī of Rājas'ekhara and the Rambhā-mañjarī of Nayacandra, no other plays of the Sattaka type were published so far. This edition of Candalehā, which has been brought out, for the first time, with remarkable critical acumen and praiseworthy labours, is a valuable addition to the wealth of our Rūpaka literature. So far, very few Prākṛit works of non-Jaina authors have seen the light of day: the result has been that most of the scholars are accustomed to look at Prākṛit as a sectarian language cultivated only by Jainas and that there is a general neglect of Prākṛit studies, as a branch of specialised and higher research, in our University circles. But now from the view-point of the history of linguistic evolution in India, it is abundantly clear that, without critical study of and researches in the Prākṛit literature and languages, we cannot get a true picture of our entire medieval Indian culture. There is no doubt that Jaina authors have rendered yeoman service to the cause of Prākṛit languages and literature, but now it is becoming more and more clear that others also have tried to contribute their mite in this direction. Through political vicissitudes and foreign attacks, much of the riches of Prākṛit literature is lost in course of time. What little from this vast literature has come down to us lies scattered in various old MSS. libraries, and some of the works are almost on the verge of extinction. They could be immortalised by the efforts of learned researchers solely devoted to the cause of Prākṛits like Dr. A. N. Upadhye. It is mainly through Dr. Upadhye's efforts and researches that we have become lately acquainted with many Prākṛit compositions which were being neglected in the MSS. libraries of the South where Dravidian languages are in vogue, and for this, I offer my sincere congratulations to this dear and modest friend of mine. His Introduction, it will be seen, is a piece of solid research. He has thoroughly reviewed the various problems connected with the Sattaka form of drama, and special attention may be drawn to his critical study of some new Sattakas discovered by him. He has collected and presented the material with remarkable industry, and his study is characterised by systematic thoroughness and sobriety of judgement. We believe, and we have great hopes that in the near future Dr. Upadhye will give us many valuable Prākṛit works with learned Introductions which are usually the results of his extensive study and mature scholarship.

It has been one of the chief aims of the Bhāratīya Vidyā Bhavana, Bombay, to bring to light such valuable and important Prākṛit works; and we hope, the learned and the wealthy of our nation will extend to us full cooperation in this direction.

PREFACE

THE present edition of the Candalehā (Sk Candalekhā) of Rudradāsa (c. 1660) is based on rare mss. from the South, the transcripts of which I could procure with great efforts. Though the material was meagre and unsatisfactory, I have exercised utmost care and scrutiny in presenting the text and Chāyā in an authentic manner. Even as it is, it should be a welcome addition to the published Prākṛit literature, especially when there has been such a deplorable dearth of Prākṛit plays belonging to the Saṭṭaka type which has been all along illustrated only by the Karpūramañjarī.

In the Introduction, after describing the ms. material and stating the procedure of text-constitution, the various aspects of Candalekhā are subjected to a critical scrutiny; and a biographical note on Rudradāsa, the author, is added at the end. The Saṭṭaka, as a type of drama, is elaborately studied in the background of the evolution of Indian drama. Further, I have presented here a detailed study of half a dozen Saṭṭakas most of which were mere names to us so far. The entire art gallery of Saṭṭaka in Indian literature is no more to be appropriated by a solitary play of Rājasekhara, because now there are half a dozen members to occupy it, and some of them quite worthy. It is by such studies, I hope, the bounds of our knowledge of Prākṛit literature would be widened and its land-marks seen in a clearer perspective.

While working on this text, various scholar-friends helped me with suggestions etc.; and it gives me pleasure to remember them with thanks. Mr. K. J. Dikshit, B. A., B. T., Sangli; Dr. A. M. Ghatage, Kolhapur, Dr. T. G. Mankar, Sangli; Prof. M. V. Patwardhan, Sangli; and Dr. V. Raghavan, Madras. I am specially grateful to Prof. K. V. Krishna Ayyar, Calicut, for his valuable notes on Zamorins and Rudra.

I record my regards to Professor B. H. Khardekar, Principal, Rajaram College, Kolhapur, whose silent sympathy for academic studies has given me the necessary peace and encouragement in my research pursuits.

I cannot adequately express my sense of obligation to Āchārya Jinavijayaji, Hon. Director, Bhāratīya Vidyā Bhavana, Bombay. He has an inborn zeal for Indian learning, and if the Candalekhā appears today in a stately form, much of the credit should go to him. His willing co-operation and guidance, his kindly interest in my studies, and, above all, his akāraṇa-vātsalya towards me have made even my heavy toils smooth and joyful.

My thanks are due to the Regency Council of the Government of Kolhapur for the kind aid given to me in my work on the Candralekhā. I also acknowledge my indebtedness to the University of Bombay for the grant-in-aid given towards the cost of the publication of this work.

INTRODUCTION

1. CRITICAL APPARATUS

The Prākṛit text and the Sanskrit chāyā of the Candalehā (Sk. Candrālekḥā), presented in this edition, are based on the material from the following mss

क—This stands for a Devanāgarī transcript of ms. No. 597 of the University mss Library, Trivandrum; and it was so kindly made available to me by Dr. L. A. Ravivarma. I am informed that the ms. is in charge of the Curator's Office, Trivandrum. It is a paper ms written in Devanāgarī characters, measuring 18½ by 8½ inches and having 152 pages with 18 lines on each page. It was prepared some twenty years back. The original source from which it was actually copied cannot be traced now, nor is the age of it recorded. It is, however, surmised that the original source might be out of the three under-mentioned palm-leaf mss. 1) Candrālekḥā Sattakam, obtained from Govind Pisharody, Kailasapuram, Vaikom, 2) Ibid., obtained from Brahmāḍattan Namburippad, Kudallur Mana, Nagalasseri, Pittambī, 3) Ibid., obtained from Narayanan Vasudevan Namburippad, Poonnurkottu Mana, Kunuattunad. I understand that all the three sources, and particularly Nos. 2 and 3, are homes of hereditary scholarship; and mss. from them are almost always trustworthy. I have had no direct access either to the Trivandrum ms. or to any of these three palm-leaf mss.; but all my readings are taken from the transcript ka supplied to me. It contains both the Prākṛit text and Sanskrit chāyā, written above and below on a page. There are some minor lacunae in a few places: they are quite negligible, and could be easily filled with the aid of the Sanskrit shade. In some places the text treats a few verses as running prose. It opens thus श्रीः चन्द्रलेखासदृकम् (at the beginning of the Prākṛit text) and ends with ॥ चन्द्रलेखा नामेय कृतिः समाप्ता ॥ (at the close of the chāyā).

ख—At the bottom of the pages of the transcript ka, described above, certain variant readings are noted in red ink and are assigned to kb about which the following information is supplied to me.

It belongs to the Palace Library, Trivandrum, and bears the No. 1497. It is a palm-leaf ms., $8\frac{1}{2}$ by 2 inches in size and containing 42 leaves. It is written in Malayālam script with 9 to 11 lines on a page. Nothing could be ascertained about the age of this ms. which is noticed as No. 3207, D.C.S.M., Vol 4, Part I A. I have neither used the palm-leaf ms lha, nor have I got a complete transcript of it, all my readings of lha stand for the entries (at the bottom of the pages of ka) which are about 135 in number and record variants of different length. They are usually connected with the Prākṛit text and rarely with the chāyā.

म—This is a transcript of a ms., No. R 3207 (a), belonging to the Govt Oriental mss Library, Madras (war-time camp, Tirupati), and I got it through the kind offices of the Curator, Dr A Shankaran. This Madras ms. called Candralokhā, I am informed, is in Grantha characters, on paper and in good condition. The size is $10\frac{5}{8}$ by $9\frac{1}{2}$ inches, and the work covers 43 pages. The actual title of the ms. is 'Mānaveda-caritam'. It was copied in 1920-21 from a ms. of M. R. Ry A. Karunakar Menon Avl., B. A., B. L., High Court Vakil, Chalapuram, Calicut, Malabar Dt. Following the Madras ms., the transcript supplied to me contains only the Sanskrit chāyā and no Prākṛit text at all. It gives the Sanskrit rendering of the Prākṛit speeches assigning them to different characters but omits the stage-directions obviously because they are in Sanskrit. The prose and verses are not in any way distinguishable. It is full of lacunae, small and big; some passages at the beginning are misplaced, the contents are not well preserved; by itself it is not of much value, but when read with ka it gives help in many places. It is full of scribal errors. It uses l for l here and there. The transcript opens with the title: मानवेदचरितम्, and ends thus इति चतुर्थं अवतारान्तरम् । समाप्तोऽयं ग्रन्थः ॥

C—My friend Dr. V Raghavan, Madras, drew my attention to the fact that the text and chāyā of Candralokhā was being published in the Samskrta-sāhitya-parīṣat-patram, Calcutta, for 1932. I procured the numbers (Vol. XIV, Nos. 10 and 11, February and March 1932) and found that the text and chāyā of the first Yavanikāntara and a few lines of those of the second one (ending with pekkhadu dāva mahārāo at II. 15) are printed so far. Still it remains incomplete. These numbers reached my hands after the first forme of the text and chāyā was struck. I learn from Dr S. K. Chatterji that it was being edited by the then Editor, Prof. Kshitiz

Chandra Chatterji himself, and that he gave it up as the ms. material he had in hand was very bad. The description of the mss. used by him is not given. But after comparing the actual corrupt readings, some of which are noted by him also, I find that his text appears to be based on a copy of the ms. ka described above. He also records a few readings of lha. As our sources are nearly identical, I have not noted down the readings of this printed text, called c here, but some of them I have discussed in the Notes. With the help of c I could check some uncertain readings in the 2nd and 3rd formes.

This is all the material that was accessible to me after good many efforts. For editing the Prākṛit text, ka is the only ms. available with a few readings of kha. The Curator's Office does not suggest any immediate relation between ka and kha, though they belong to one and the same locality. The ms. kha does show independent readings; it contains some passages not found in ka; and here and there it shows different arrangement of speeches and stage-directions. They show some mutual independence one is not the direct copy of the other. The full copy of kha is not before me, so the siglum kha just stands for 135 entries of various readings. The editor, therefore, had to constitute the Prākṛit text mainly on the basis of ka. The readings supplied by kha are sensible and at times superior to those of ka, but, as their number was limited, their advantage could be taken only in a few places. In all the cases where the readings from both are available, they are clearly indicated in the foot-notes. Whenever a reading of ka is noted, it does not mean, unless specifically mentioned, that the text presented in the body agrees with that of kha. It only means that the editor, for reasons elaborated below, had to improve upon the actual readings of ka which, in important cases, are recorded in the foot-notes with all care and fidelity. If the reading of kha has been accepted in preference to that of ka, it is made quite explicit by giving the readings of both in those places.

As the Prākṛit text is primarily based on the ms. ka, we have to scrutinize its nature more carefully and note some of its important traits. First, it contains many evident blunders which can be unquestionably attributed to indifferent copying, some of them could not be called genuine readings. Secondly, the ms. exhibits consistently certain peculiarities which deserve to be explained before they are correctly emended, without noting the variants: at times short and long vowels are not rightly distinguished, for instance, nāra for nāra, pāra for pāra, turām for turām, a short vowel with anusvāra and a long vowel are often mutually confused, for instance, dāni for dānim, ki for kum, a duplicate consonant is not properly distinguished from a consonant preceded by an anusvāra, as in, sammdha for samaddha, tassa for tamsa, vimkhambha for vikkhambha; conjunct groups are written, almost regularly, as kkkk, thth, dhdh; very often aspirated and unaspirated consonants serve each other's purpose, more than once t and th stand for ḍ and ḍh, l for ṛ, ph for bh, h for t, d for dh, nn for nh, nm for mh, sometimes l is used for ṛ (also in the chāyā, though rarely), some consonants are indiscriminately written, one for the other, p & v, b & v, and l & n. Such lapses are found scattered all over the Prākṛit text in a bewildering quantity. Some of these, no doubt, have arisen out of the peculiarities of the Malayālam and Grantha characters and the mode of writing Prākṛits adopted therein. Copyists, who were not quite well-versed with Prākṛit phonology, have not been able to read correctly the ādarśa from which they prepared the copies. Lastly, we have another set of scribal lapses in this text as written in our mss. what looks like ya-sruti is seen in words like sayala, loya, samaya etc. this may be partly due to the influence of Trivikrama's Prākṛit grammar which has been quite popular in the South and partly to the preservation of Sanskrit medial y, more than once m is retained at the end of a metrical foot, nasal conjunct groups are often written as in bhingi, bhaṅgiā rather than as in bhīngi, bhamgiā; usually conjuncts are written like hm and hn, and not mh and nh; och rather than ch is written at the initial of a word; in some words, here and there, we find ar, au, s, pr and a visarga retained as in their Sanskrit counterparts, and we get declensional forms like menim, lilām etc. It is true that in many respects the dramatic Prākṛits, as contrasted with Ardhamāgadhī and even Jaina Māhārāṣṭrī, are moulded after the model of classical Sanskrit from which later on even ready-made forms were subjected to phonetic corruption and imported into Prākṛit. The above lapses are definitely due to Sanskrit influence which was working on our text too, for obvious reasons: the contiguous presence of the Sanskrit chāyā with the Prākṛit text, the neglect of Prākṛit passages in preference to the chāyā in studying the drama, constant checking and correcting of the Prākṛit text with the aid of the chāyā, and lastly, the confirmed habit of copyists to write Sanskrit works usually and Prākṛit works rarely. We come across these lapses in a greater abundance especially in those texts which are preserved in the South or in southern scripts. The readings, noted in the footnotes, are sufficiently exhaustive. Apparent scribal blunders are ignored, but the two other categories of misreadings are sufficiently illustrated. If it is felt that some of them do not deserve to be noted, I can only add that I have erred on the safer side.

CONSTITUTION AND PRESENTATION OF THE TEXT AND CHĀYĀ

Though classified here according to a slightly different plan, similar scribal errors were found in the mss. of Kamsavaho and Usāpiruddham¹ which have been already edited by me. As in them, the Prākṛit text has been presented here in a standardised form with regard to orthography and other external details, and the method of text-constitution is nearly the same. The Caṁdalehā is a late work, to be assigned to the closing period of Prākṛit literature; so the grammatical standards, elaborated in earlier Prākṛit grammars, cannot be altogether ignored. On the whole, when correcting the threefold scribal lapses, it is expected that the language of the text should conform to the recognised linguistic tendencies of Prākṛits and to the rules laid down by Prākṛit grammarians. This is a broad principle, though every detail has to be scrutinised on its own merits, at least in some cases. The tendencies of scribal errors being once detected, minor corrections could be made with the help of the chāyā, in view of the metrical needs in verses, in the light of illustrations noted by Pischel², and after comparing the forms with those in the text and variants presented by Konow in his edition of the Kappūramamḥarī³ which has served as a model for the Caṁdalehā. Utmost fidelity to the ms is my guiding principle,

 - 2 All the references to Pischel, unless otherwise stated, have in view his Grammatik der Prākṛit-Sprachen, Strassburg 1900; a complete Index of the Prākṛit words in it is prepared by Wickremasinghe and published in the Indian Antiquary.

and my corrections do not go beyond the threefold lapses which are sufficiently evident even from the select readings. No genuine reading is consciously sacrificed in the interest of some editorial discipline, a stray rule of grammar, a certain dialectal theory, or some linguistic expectation. Whenever I entertained even a slight suspicion that it is not unlikely that others might have some other alternative correction to suggest, I have carefully noted the actual readings, exactly as they are in my transcript, in the foot-notes

Both Kappūramamjaī and Camdaleha are Sattakas. The former is edited in a superb style by Sten Konow; and it is quite natural that these two plays should be compared with regard to their Prākṛit dialects. It is necessary to note Konow's method of text constitution and also to indicate how I have proceeded. Pischel points out (§ 12) that Māhārāstrī, the phonetic structure of which was largely determined by the fact that it was above all used in musical stanzas, has been employed in the Gāthās and allied songs which he scattered in the writings of authors on rhetorics and are grafted also in the dramas. According to Viśvanūtha (14th century A. D.), women not of lowly origin should speak Śaurasenī in drama, but in their songs (āsām eva tu gāthāsu) they should use Māhārāstrī (Sāhityadarpana VI. 159). 'This application of Māhārāstrī', Pischel concludes, 'in lyrical poems destined for musical purposes is doubtless the oldest, and the dropping of consonants in such large proportions is primarily to be attributed to this cause.' In another context he remarks (§ 22) 'The Śaurasenī occupies the first place among the Prākṛit dialects which are used in the prose of the dramas.' Pischel and Konow were almost simultaneously working on the Grammatik and Karpūramamjaī. Pischel introduced a genuine order in the study of Prākṛits by his monumental grammar, and, taking their mutual relation into consideration, it is no wonder that Konow wanted to carry with zeal the theory laid down by Pischel into practice. Konow distinguished the dialect of the prose from that of the verses in the Karpūramamjaī (p. 202). This is put by Lanman in plain terms. 'The Śaurasenī is used as the conversational dialect, that is, in the prose passages; while the Māhārāstrī is regularly used in the stanzas' (p. 200). Acceptance of this rule with universal and retrospective applicability has led Konow beyond the limits of readings supplied to him by nearly a dozen mss., and here is his frank confession. 'The chief aim of this edition then is a linguistic one. But besides, I have also been guided by another consideration. I often had to regret that no chrestomathy of the Prākṛits of the plays exists, and it was my hope that the Karpūramañjarī might be used as such one. This consideration has also, to some extent, influenced my work. Thus I have, in some places, introduced the peculiar forms of the two dialects, even against the reading of all MSS (pp. xxi-xxii, Italics mine) Some of the subsequent editors of dramas have not been able to agree with Konow's practice. Hillebrandt remarks thus in his Preface (p. iii) to Mudrārāksasam (Breslau 1912) 'In plays Māhārāṣṭrī is restricted to songs this in an old rule the correction of which I see no reason of doubting; but the restriction of Śaurasenī to the prose passages of dramatic works is an assumption to which I cannot accede' He further points out how the best mss. admit Śaurasenī verses The greatest reaction against Konow's procedure comes from Dr. M. Ghosh who has re-edited the Karpūramañjarī.¹

A text-critic is not open to adverse criticism, if his grammatical standards are upheld by the readings of his genuine mss. systematically collated by him; but when, in spite of a large number of mss., he has to emend his text against the best readings, simply because he has set before himself certain dialectal standards, one begins to suspect the universality of the standards and the soundness of his procedure. The zeal for scientific thoroughness, textual uniformity and strict editorial discipline is allright, but when it is satisfied at the cost of genuine readings, without a word of apologetic explanation, the text critic is cutting the very sand under his feet.

In editing the text of Camdalehā, the threefold scribal lapses only are corrected, and no genuine reading is silently tampered with to fulfil any dialectal convention. It is a modest and conscientious effort to record faithfully the text of Camdalehā available to the editor from a single ms. after judiciously eschewing the scribal lapses. In discarding, discriminating and determining the readings I have tried to be as careful and cautious as possible. It is quite likely that critical judgment may vary on minor details I have, however, given the actual readings in all crucial cases, so that others may be able to correct my errors and build a better text when some more mss. are available.

In presenting the Prākṛit text I have followed nearly the same principles adopted in the Kāmsavaho and Usāpiruddham.

1 Published by the University of Calcutta, Calcutta 1939.

One point, however, I may touch upon here. This text uniformly reads kim vi, some variant readings are kī vi; and as far as I remember, only once the reading is kim pi. kī for kū is only a misreading belonging to the category that a long vowel often compensates a short vowel with a anusvāra in this ms. It is true that the ms. confuses p and v, but on the basis of this general tendency I have not corrected kim vi into kim pi, because the ms. uniformly, with one stray exception, writes kū vi. According to Hemacandra's grammar (VIII. ii, 218) the Sanskrit particle api is to be replaced by pi and vi. Pischel (§§ 143, 171, 180) looks upon vi after an anusvāra as a mistake, and his view is backed by the authority of Mārkaṇḍeya (Prākṛta-sarvasva, VIII. 17). I do appreciate, in this context, the grammatical authority, linguistic justification and the general practice of earlier texts on which his view is founded. But all this is not enough to emend the uniform reading of a ms in view of another consideration. The Camdalehā is a late work in which the author used the Prākṛit dialect in a mechanical manner; and once vi got equated with the particle api, it would be used mechanically wherever api was to be put. This practice has been in vogue from a pretty long time. Some of the mss. of Mudrārākṣasam, both from the South and North, collated by Hillebrandt do show vi after an anusvāra (see the readings on pp. 12, 17, 38, 66, 109, 132 etc.). In the mss. of the Mahāvīra-caritam (London 1928), as observed by Todar Mall (Intro., p. XXXIX), the word api always appears as vi, even after an anusvāra. He thought, following Pischel, that the correct form should be pi and emended accordingly. All this means that vi was, for our author, just a substitute for api without any reservations, and not behaving differently (i. e., becoming pi) after an anusvāra because of its enclitic nature. So I have retained the substitutes of api as they are given in the ms.

I have retained the Daṇḍas almost as they are found in the Prākṛit text, at times checking them with the help of the chāyā. For facility of reading and understanding I have added a comma in some places, after the vocatives (after the last, if there are many) and interjections and in separating small sentences that follow in quick succession. Minor lacunae of a syllable or two are silently supplied, but if the reading is not definite or the passage is long, then it is put in square brackets. The corresponding chāyā is shown by the referential Roman figures I, II etc. The prose lines of the Prākṛit text between two verses (which are separately numbered in each Yavanikāntara) are numbered by threes. The letters a, b, c and d stand for the pādas of a verse. Thus I. 17. 22 means First Yavanikāntara, prose line 22 after the verse No 17, and I. 20b means the second pāda of verse No 20 of the First Yavanikāntara. This would help the reader to refer to any Prākṛit portion conveniently. The actual variant readings of the Prākṛit text are noted immediately below the same.

The chāyā is based on two mss ha and ma, and only genuine and significant variants are noted just below it. If the chāyā agrees in both, but disagrees with the Prākṛit text in any place, it is marked with an asterisk to indicate that it is not sanctioned by our text. Often the asterisk implies that the chāyā possibly presupposes a different reading in the Prākṛit text. Good many lacunae are found in ma; the longer and the smaller but significant ones are duly noted in the variants. For the benefit of readers that they might easily equate Prākṛit and Sanskrit words, the rules of Samdhi or phonetic combination are not strictly enforced on the readings, which are allowed to remain as they are in the mss. If the two mss. disagree, the reading that is looser in Samdhi is accepted without noting the other reading. The chāyā does not repeat the names of characters and stage-directions, the omission of the latter, when they come in the middle of a line, being indicated by three dots within brackets. It is presented in a running form with Roman serial numbers (corresponding to those put in the Prākṛit text) put for successive speeches on a page. Though verse Nos. are given, the lines are continuously printed, because they are no more metrical in the chāyā. Commas are added corresponding to those in the Prākṛit text, they also separate some of the lines of a verse. In some cases, for instance kasmin for kahin when kutra would be better, one is tempted to correct the chāyā, but I have not done so. Some such suggestions are made in the Notes. The readings of the chāyā, whether they are phonetic equivalents or sense equivalents, are allowed to remain as they are in the mss.

3. CANDRALEKHĀ. A CRITICAL STUDY

i) DRAMATIS PERSONAE

Cakoraka, see Vidūṣaka.

Cāmara-grāhīnī, a female Door-keeper who carries a chowrie in her hand.

Candanikā, a maid-servant.

Candralekhā, see Nāyikā

Candrikā, a maid-servant, attending on Candialekha.

Cetī, a maid-servant, Candanikā by name

Cintāmaṇi-devatā, the Deity presiding over the jewel Cintāmaṇi which was presented to Mānaveda by Sindhunātha through his minister Suśruta Devī, the Queen, the first wife of the King, Mānaveda.

Gosamjña, see Vidūsaka

Kalabhāsini, a female Door-keeper.

Mānaveda, see Rājan

Mañjubhāsini, a female Door-keeper.

Naktamālikā, a maid-servant

Nāyikā, Candralekhā, the Heroine. She is introduced on the stage first as Adbhuta-kanyakā, Cintāmaṇi- or Ratna-sambhavā, because she was brought forth miraculously by the jewel Cintāmaṇi. She is the daughter of Candravarman, the king of Angas. Her mother and the mother of the Queen are sisters, so she is a sister to the Queen. She has a brother Candraketu by name. It was prophesied that she would be the wife of a universal monarch. Cintāmaṇi-devatā brought her to the palace of king Mānaveda to whom she was married at last with Queen's consent

Pāripārśvaka, the Assistant of the Director (sūtradhāra).

Pratihārī, a female Door-keeper, Mañjubhāsini.

Rājan, the King, Mānaveda, the Hero, who marries Candralekhā and acquires universal sovereignty.

Sumati, a Minister of king Mānaveda

Suśruta, the Minister of Sindhunātha. He brings the jewel Cintāmaṇi as a present from his master to king Mānaveda.

Sūtradhāra, the Director of the play.

Tamālikā, a maid-servant, attending the Queen.

Vatālika (I and II), Bards, Mañjukapṭha and Madhurakapṭha by name.

Vidūsaka, the Jester, a Companion of the King, also called Cakolaka, Gosamjña.

ii) STORY OF THE PLAY

The Queen of Mānaveda had her aunt married to Candravarman, the king of Angas. Candravarman has a lovely daughter, Candralekhā by name. She had auspicious marks on her body; and it was prophesied that she would make her husband a universal monarch. Naturally she was an object of attraction for various kings.

During spring, one day, the king Sindhunātha sent to Mānaveda a pleasure gift of the jewel Cintāmani, well-known for its miraculous potency to fulfil any desire. Mānaveda accepted the gift. It was one of his ambitions that he should become the monarch of the earth surrounded by seven seas. Knowing from the King that the jewel is presided over by a Deity, namely, Cintāmanidevatā, who grants any object of desire, Vidyūṣaka entreated the jewel Cintāmani to bring before them the most lovely girl on the earth.

That day Candralekhā was sporting in the park at Campā. She was, through the power of that jewel, straight-way brought to the palace of Mānaveda. Her identity, however, was not known to any one excepting the Deity. She was so beautiful that her presence was a matter of surprise to all. The Queen welcomed her as a noble-born girl. From the moment the King saw her, he fell in love with her. Candralekhā also felt attachment for him. Once he attended her singing entertainment, and a second time he met her in the Plantain Arbour. Their passion for each other reached almost a fatal point. The Queen suspected and came to know about their love; and hearing about their secret meeting, she kept that poor girl under guard. She was not aware of her personal relation with her.

The sudden disappearance of Candralekhā from Campā was a matter of great concern to the family. Her brother Candraketu came to the court of Mānaveda for Viṣuvotsava. He gave out the distressing news to the Queen (of Mānaveda) how her cousin sister Candralekhā, who was destined to be the wife of a Cakravartin and who was betrothed to king Mānaveda, had disappeared to their great sorrow. The Queen immediately appealed to Mānaveda to inquire from the kings gathered there as to who had kidnapped princess Candralekhā. They all solemnly pleaded innocence in the matter.

King Mānaveda, seeing no other way out, prayed to that Cintāmanidevatā who consequently brought forth the same lovely girl as Candralekhā. It was a surprise and joy for all. The goddess told the Queen that Candialekhā was destined to be the wife of a Cakravartin and that, therefore, she should consent to her being married to Mānaveda. She assented to it. Mānaveda and Candralekhā were duly wedded; and thus all the ambitions of the king are fulfilled.

iii) SYNOPTIC ANALYSIS OF THE PLAY

The scenic division, which has no special reference to the canons of Indian Dramaturgy, is primarily meant for the convenience of following the events of the play. The entrances and exits, the place of action and independent episodes, narrated or acted, have served as the guiding principle.

The play is enacted possibly in the Nāṭyaśālā attached to the palace of king Mānaveda, the audience consisting of the learned people in the royal court at whose instance it was being performed.

Manager's Prelude (sthāpanā)

Scene 1 (I 1). Recitation of the benediction (nāṇḍi).

Scene 2 (I 1. 1-). Enters the Director (sūtradhāra), salutes Pārvatī and Śiva, and hears the commencement of the play.

Scene 3 (I. 4 7-). Enters the Assistant (pāripārsvaka); both of them discuss the nature of Sattaka, its author Rudradāsa of the Pāraśava family (described), his teachers Rudra and Śrikantha (described), the flavour of Prākṛit, enactment of the Sattaka at the instance of the learned assembly of king Mānaveda (described elaborately) and the gist of the plot that in this play Mānaveda marries Candralekhā, the daughter of the king of Angas, who brings to him universal monarchy. Entrance of King and Queen announced. Exeunt.

[The seasonal back-ground of the play is Vasanta or Spring, i. e., the two months, Caitra and Vaiśākha. There is a reference to breezes of Caitra at I. 24, and Viṣuvotsava, at the beginning of the year, is being celebrated (IV. 1 1 etc.).]

Yavanikāntara I

[The action in this Yava begins possibly late in the afternoon. The bard announces evening at I 37 9, and the King also refers to it, I. 40-41.]

Scene 1 (I 13 5-) Metropolis, possibly a hall in the palace. Enter King and Queen with retinue. The King broods over his ambition to become the lord of the earth bounded by seven seas, and requests the Queen to enjoy the beauty of the town at the advent of spring. Both of them describe it. Vidūṣaka also joins them with his florid description. Candanikā draws their attention to the hospitable invitation of Emerald Park (marakatārāma); she almost competes with Vidūṣaka in offering a beautiful description, and both want to win royal approbation. Vidūṣaka proposes a visit to the Emerald Park. King's right eye is throbbing, and Vidūṣaka prophesies that the King would win the earth sealed with seven seas. The Queen amens it.

Scene 2 (I 18 8-) Emerald Park All enter it—Behind the stage, two bards, Mañjukantha and Madhurakantha, glorify and greet the King drawing his attention to the charms of the Park—At Vidūṣaka's request to enjoy the wealth of its beauty, the King describes the Park. They all sit to enjoy its charms. The King and Queen congratulate each other on the beauty of the season with its refreshing breezes.—Vidūṣaka says that he forgot his learning at home, and when he demands something on loan, Candanikā is ready to give it. He feels offended. She sings a fine verse fulfilling his conditions and to the approval of the King. Vidūṣaka quietly transfers his own defeat to the King, and announces the arrival of minister Sumati.

Scene 3 (I. 27 5-) Enters Sumati with Suśruta, the minister of Sindhunātha. After mutual welfare-inquiry, Suśruta requests the King to accept Sindhunātha's pleasure-gift, namely, the jewel Cintāmaṇi, which was acquired by his master from the Ocean and which would fulfil all the desires. It was put in a gold tray under silk cover. Sumati is asked to look duly after Suśruta. Exeunt.

Scene 4 (I. 27 27-) Vidūṣaka removes the silk cover, and the King praises the lustre and power of that Cintāmaṇi. Finding Vidūṣaka cold about its potency, the King tells him that such jewels are presided over by invisible Deities who can bestow any gift. Thereupon, with King's consent, he entreats, with his eyes closed, the Jewel to bring on the stage the most lovely girl.

Scene 5 (I. 29 16-) Enters the Heroine (mentioned as Adbhuta-kanyakā, Cintāmaṇi-, or Ratna-sambhavā, later on as Cāndrālekḥā) The King admires her beauty in rapturous stanzas. She also feels regard for him. The Queen recognises her as noble-born. Vidūṣaka hints that she would be the queen of a Cakravartin. The King expresses his deep passion for her. The Heroine also is afflicted with love, and finds the situation unbearable. The Queen, noting that she was new to the place, offers her a seat. The Heroine appreciates her as a matching Queen for the King—Behind the stage, the Bard glorifies Mānaveda, and announces the evening in a couple of descriptive stanzas.—The Heroine recognises the King about whom she had heard from her father. The Queen loves her like a sister, and with King's ready consent, she conducts her to the harem while she (i. e., the Heroine) looks at the King affectionately.—The King welcomes evening with slight dejection. He insists on the Jewel being respectfully preserved, when Vidūṣaka tells him that it may be thrown away now because it has already served its purpose. Exeunt All.

Yavanikāntara II

[Some days appear to have elapsed after the King saw the Heroine (II. 15. 3). The action here begins in the morning, after the King has come to the hall of audience. At the end there is a reference to snāna-velā, and midday is announced by the bard.]

Scene 1 (II. 0. 1—) Āsthāna-mandapa or the hall of audience: Enter the King and the female Chowrie-bearer. He remembers the Heroine, her charming limbs, the cupid and his armoury etc., and sings enamoured stanzas. The Chowrie-bearer, however, is trying to divert his attention by describing the spring.

Scene 2 (II. 8. 2—) Enters Vidūṣaka to find the King pining with passion for the Heroine. The King assures him that his partiality for the Queen continues. Vidūṣaka narrates to him his mission thus: "Being appointed by you to get some news from the harem, I went thither early morning. On my way I met Tamālīkā, with a statue in her hand, who avoided me. I too proceeded indifferently. The maid-servants (described) asked me severally about the episode of the Emerald Park. Somehow I managed to escape them and entered the harem where the Queen received me with utmost hospitality. I was seen by the Heroine (the King passionately broods on her). After spending some time happily, I took leave of the Queen. On my way back I met Candanikā who made a truce with me and gave me this letter in Heroine's hand-writing "Here it is." With thrill the King reads the love letter as well as the stanzas from Candanikā and Candrikā. Further Vidūsaka conveys to the King that Candanikā told him how the Queen has come to know Heroine's skill in singing, how she has fixed her musical entertainment in the Ruby Park (padmarāgārāma) nearby so that the King might not know it, and how the King (and Vidūsaka, of course at Candanikā's request) might witness the same secretly from a secluded spot. As they found the Queen and Heroine going to the Ruby Park, they also proceeded to the Park and took their seat on a sapphire slab under the Tamāla, not being visible to others.

Scene 3 (II. 16. 7-). Ruby Park. Enter the Queen and (love-stricken) Heroine with retinue. The King feels happy to have a glimpse of Heroine's beautiful face; while she, reminded of the Emerald Park, is feeling love-sick.—The Queen, Heroine etc. take their seat on a dias of lapis lazuli. The Heroine begins to play on the lute and sing. Vidūsaka appreciates her specialised skill, and the King is simply amazed at it. Vidūsaka describes her various limbs etc. in one line, and the King adds the other line of the stanza interpreting the description with some fanciful imagery. The musical entertainment is over, and the King feels sorry. Exeunt Queen, Heroine and retinue.

Scene 4 (II. 33. 1-). On way back from the Ruby Park. The King and Vidūsaka stop for a while to hear what Naktamālikā and Tamālikā, the latter with a statue (sālabhañjikā) in hand, are talking as they are going towards them. It is evident from their conversation that the Queen has suspected King's affection for the Heroine. She had received, as a present, a Śārikā bird, Bandhumatī by name, of retentive memory from queen Śārādā of Kāśmīra. She placed the bird within the throat of a statue which was trickily put in the assembly hall where the King and Vidūsaka conversed. The bird has heard all that the King spoke, and now Tamālikā is carrying back the statue finding the King absent from the hall. The maid-servants go, as it is the time for Queen's bath—Behind the curtain, a bard announces midday and greets the King. The king feels anxious about the Śārikā episode which might enrage the Queen, but Vidūśaka assures him that his (i. e., King's) generosity would soon bring her round. Both go to the harem. Exeunt All.

Yavanikāntaia III

[Some days (III 4. 19) have elapsed between the II and III Yava. The action here begins early in the evening (pradoṣa). There are clear references to the passing of evening (III. 5. 3), the spread of darkness (III. 9) and the rise of moon which is elaborately described in different stanzas]

Scene 1 (III 0. 1-) Enter the King and Vidūśaka. The King feels dejected because the fate is not favourable. Vidūśaka tries to divert his attention, but the King feels quite helpless. Vidūśaka holds some hope for him, because he learnt from Candanikā the following details. The Heroine is suffering from acute pains of passion; she is physically weak, and for a change she has been taken to the Plantain Arbour near the lake. The various cooling remedies have no effect on her, she is almost nearing the end of her life; anyhow the day has passed, and somehow that orphan gull must be saved from death. This report moves the King; and as suggested by Vidūśaka, both of them start towards the Plantain Arbour. It is late in the evening and the Queen is away to salute Sthalīśvara. It is announced from behind the curtain, as the moon is rising, that the cooling measures are of no avail for the Heroine against the burning sensation of body, and no one knows who would save her.

Scene 2 (III. 12 1-). In order to save her, the King (with Vidūśaka) approaches the Heroine, lying on bed of leaves and attended by Candanikā and Candrikā who are using refrigerants. The Heroine tries to get up to welcome the King, but he sits with her holding her hand: at his touch she feels a sudden change, from conflagration to nectar-ocean. Both of them feel quite happy. The King welcomes the rising moon.—Behind the stage, the two Bards, Mañjukantha and Madhurakantha, greet the King with elaborate description of moonlight. All of them vie with each other in giving poetic descriptions of the rising moon.—As the Queen is returning to the Plantain Arbour after saluting Sthalisvara, the noise of the retinue was heard, Candanikā requests the King to see that this meeting is not disclosed to the Queen, he consents. Exeunt All.

Yavanikāntara IV

[The action here begins in the morning, and we have clear references to prabhāta or prabhāta-velā, IV. 1 3, IV. 2. 1, IV. 5. 3.]

Scene 1 (IV. 0. 1–). The hall of audience (āsthāna-maṇḍapa). Enter the King (dressed for the occasion), retinue and two female Door-keepers, Mañjubhāsinī and Kalabhāsinī. The King is feeling sorry that his contact with the Heroine was shortlived and unfruitful. The Pratihārīs congratulate him on the occasion of the Visuvotsava.—Behind the stage, the Bard wishes that morning might bring welfare to the King.

Scene 2 (IV. 6. 1–). The King gives audience to various feudatories who have come to pay respects to him. With suitable descriptions Kalabhāsinī and Mañjubhāsinī alternatively announce the kings of Vīdarbha, Ujjayanī, Manalūra, Cola, Aṅga, Magadha and Karpāta, and the rulers of Nepāla, Kāmboja, Pāñcala, Turuska, Cedi, Nisadha, Vārāṇasī, Pārasika, Mahārāṣṭra, Vaṅga, Madra, Mathurā, Matsya, Kāśmīra, Kāñci and Dravida. They were treated with due respects, and they were about to start back to their respective places.

Scene 3 (IV. 25. 4–). The King is anxious to see the Heroine, and he is waiting for Vidūṣaka from the harem. Enters Vidūṣaka. He informs the King how, after receiving due hospitality, he happened to talk in dream about the meeting of the King and Heroine in the Plantain Arbour near the lake. This enraged the Queen very much. Consequently she has put the Heroine in chains and guarded her with an army of maid-servants (who are enumerated) Scene 4 (IV 26. 31-). The King feels sorry that the Queen is very angry. But Vidūṣaka tells him how her anger would disappear on account of her fresh sorrow. Vidūṣaka discloses the following facts: After paying respects to the King, prince Candraketu, the son of her aunt's husband, Candravarman, the King of Angas, visited the Queen. He conveyed to her that his sister Candralekhā, her aunt's daughter, while she was playing in the park, has disappeared from Campā, and as yet she has not been traced. Candralekhā has been betrothed to the King (viz, Mānaveda) knowing from an interpreter of marks on the body that she would make her husband a universal monarch. And all this, added Vidūṣaka, has made the Queen sorrowful.—The King became enraged and passed orders to investigate from the kings, gathered there, as to who had kidnapped Candralekhā. —Enters the Queen shedding tears, with Tamālikā, and requests the King to search out her sister Candralekhā. All the kings solemnly declare their innocence. The King appeals to the presiding Deity of the jewel Cintāmani to bring back Candralekhā.

Scene 5 (IV. 27. 23-) Enters Cintāmani-devatā. She presents the Heroine, hereafter called Candralekhā. All are surprised. The Queen meets her bashful sister with joy. Cintāmani-devatā announces that Candralekhā's husband would be a universal monarch and that therefore the Queen should consent to her marriage with the King. The Queen expresses her consent. Candralekhā is decorated for the occasion. All the kings, who had assembled for the Viṣuvotsava, are asked to stay for the wedding festival. The King and Candralekhā are wedded to the joy of all, especially of Vidūṣaka who dances with glee.—The goddess wants to know what more can she do. The King felicitates himself; and the play closes with the usual benediction, in which he prays that kings should have stainless fame, that men should recognise mutual obligation, that the learned should be free from jealousy, and that the blessings of Sarasvatī should flow for ever. Exeunt All.

iv) PRĀKRIT DRAMA · SATTAKA

α) EARLY INDIAN DRAMA¹

Even in the hands of early play-wrights like Bhāsa, Śūdraka and Kālidāsa, the dramatic compositions exhibit such a perfect form and finish that one is forced to postulate a long period of evolution and extensive experimentation prior to these authors. Aśvaghoṣa's plays, though found in fragments, are quite mature products. Turning to treatises on dramaturgy by Bharata and others, we are faced with a bewildering mass of theoretic details about the various aspects of drama it is more an attempt at systematic collection and compilation of the then known materials. This plethora of details, howsoever useful for practical purposes and for understanding the dramatic technique, will not give us a historical sketch of the origin and gradual growth of the drama. The Indian tradition claims divine origin for the drama. Brahman drew elements like recitation, song, mimetic art and sentiment from the four Vedas; Śiva and others contributed dancing etc., and it was Bharata who brought it down to the Earth. Such an explanation cannot satisfy modern scholarship. Consequently the scholars took the drama almost in its final form and tried to trace back its various constituent elements in the different strata of ancient Indian literature, arranged according to relative chronology. The conversation has its counterpart in the dialogue-hymns of the R̥gveda which were repeated at a sacrifice perhaps by two parties with musical modulation, which, as an art, was fully developed as seen in the Sāmaveda. Ethnologically music, dance and drama have developed together among many peoples. The rituals of the Mahāvratā ceremonial, too, possess elements from which the drama might develop. The literary form and the themes of the drama are heavily indebted to the recitations and the contents of the epics like the Mahābhārata and Rāmāyaṇa. Pāṇini (c. 4th century B.C.) speaks of naṭas and naṭa-sūtras, i. e., dancers and their hand-books. The Mahābhāṣya of Patañjali (c. 140 B.C.) refers to a dramatic performance of some kind connected with the legends of Kṛṣṇa, Kāṁsa and Bali. All these references presume and would indicate a religious origin of drama. The drama, in its finished form, has much of the palace-life in it and can amuse only an audience of intellectual aristocrats, but that need not preclude us from recognising its popular elements which are closely connected with the lives of common people. There are, then, other scholars who hold different theories of the secular origin for the drama, say, from a popular mime which was introduced into the religious ritual and which, later on, with the epic, forms the fore-runner of the early Indian drama. The Indian life was so much permeated with religious spirit that it is difficult to demarcate exclusively the religious from the secular. The presence of non-Sanskritic technical terms, the use of Prākṛits, simplicity of the stage, the combination of music and dance, the mixture of prose and lyrics, introduction of a character like Vidūsaka, etc. are adduced as proofs for the popular origin. Bits of evidence are studiously sought in the drama to trace back its source to puppet-play and shadow-play. Some scholars have tried to trace the origin of Indian drama to the influence of the Greeks; but sober scholars feel convinced that its development can be satisfactorily explained by indigenous antecedents.

6) RŪPAKAS AND UPARŪPAKAS

A critical study of the basic terms and of the types of dramas, unfolds altogether a complicated picture of the evolution of early Indian drama. Though etymologically they are quite akin, it appears that nṛtta stands for mere dance, nṛtya means dance with gesture or mimetic art, and nāṭya signifies dance, gesture and dialogue (in prose and verse). It is the nāṭya that incorporated the essentials of a drama proper. The dramatic entertainments based on nāṭya have been designated by a general term Rūpaka which originally connoted 'representation,' and those based on nṛtya by Upa-rūpaka.¹

When they are mentioned as Rūpaka, there is much unanimity among theorists about the number ten and about the types, namely, Nāṭaka, Prakaraṇa, Bhāṇa, Vyāyoga, Samavakāra, Dima, Ihāmṛga, Anka, Vithi and Prahasana.² Hemacandra classifies nāṭhya-kāvya into twelve types³ which are the same as ten Rūpakas with the addition of Nāṭikā and Saṭṭaka; and Rāmacandra recognises twelve, i. e., ten Rūpakas plus Nāṭikā and Prakaraṇī, as the famous varieties of abhineya-kāvya. About the exact number and enumeration of the so-called Uparūpakas, there is no agreement among theorists. Perhaps different lists, as seen from the Bhāva-prakāśana, were current in different parts of India, and it is only the select ones that received recognition at the hands of different authorities. Putting all the known sub-types together, the number of Uparūpakas comes to about twentyfive. About these Keith remarks thus.¹ "The later theory as seen in Viśvanātha adds descriptions of eighteen minor forms of drama, Uparūpakas, which represent refinements on the original scheme. Needless to say, though omitted in the Nāṭyaśāstra, quotations are found ascribing to Bharata the doctrine, though he mentions in them but fifteen with several variations of name, the Agni Purāṇa mentions eighteen with some variants of name, while a verse cited by Dhanika names seven forms of mimetic dramas,² which it classes in conjunction with the Bhāṇa. The age of these divisions is, therefore, uncertain, the Daśarūpa condescends to mention only the Nāṭikā, but obviously knows of the existence of others, confining its scope to the main forms, as its title indicates."

1 See Mankad's book noted above, p. 23.

The four types Nāṭī or Nāṭikā, Prakaranī or Prakaranikā, Trotaka and Sattaka are treated by some as derivatives from or as allied to Rūpaka types and by others as Uparūpakas. The names of the first two are closely akin to Nāṭaka and Prakarana, and the definition of Sattaka is made very much dependent on that of Nāṭikā. The Nāṭyaśāstra describes Nāṭikā as a mixture of Nāṭaka and Prakarana, Daśarūpaka includes it under Nāṭaka, Hemacandra and Rāmacandra treat it on par with ten Rūpakas, Bhāvaprakāśana follows the Nāṭyaśāstra, and the Sāhitya-darpana includes it under Uparūpakas. The Sattaka is not mentioned by the Nāṭyaśāstra and Daśarūpaka, which, however, mention Nāṭikā; Hemacandra mentions Nāṭikā and Sattaka separately. Abhinavagupta, Śāradātanaya, Sāgaranandin etc mention and define Sattaka. Viśvanātha calls Sattaka an Uparūpaka. Almost everywhere the tendency is to define Sattaka in terms of the description of Nāṭikā.

c) NĀṬIKĀ AND SAṬṬAKA

In order to understand what Sattaka is, we must first note the salient traits of Nāṭikā. According to the Nāṭyaśāstra (XVIII.

1 The Sanskrit Drama, p. 319

2 Daśarūpaka 1. 8

58-61),¹ Nāṭikā is a variety of Nāṭaka-Prakarana; its subject-matter is invented, the hero is a king, the heroine is either a girl from the harem or the saṃgīta-sālā, and an object of attainment; it has many females, four acts, graceful histrionics (lahitābhinayaśmukhā), well-arranged angas, royal (or love) affairs, conciliation, anger and trickery (damḥa). It has a hero (nāyaka), a queen (devī), a go-between (dūti) and attendants (pariyāna).

The Daśarūpaka, however, adds that there is an endless variety of the forms of the Nāṭikā, and it may have one, two, three or four acts, with various combinations of characters and the like. Its subject-matter is taken from the Prakaraṇa, and its hero, a self-controlled and light-hearted (dhīra-lalita) king, from the Nāṭaka. Devī is the elder queen, of the type known as experienced, of royal lineage, serious, and it is through her consent, the hero is united with the heroine. The heroine also is of royal descent, of the type known as inexperienced and is charming and exceedingly fascinating. Being connected with the harem, she is in the vicinity of the hero whose passion for her develops step by step by seeing and hearing about her. The hero is apprehensive through fear of the queen. There are four elements of laṣikā or gay style, as if respectively joined to the four acts. The principal sentiment is the erotic with its various characteristics. The Sāhitya-darpana practically covers all that is said in the Nāṭyaśāstra and amplified by the Daśarūpaka. It is silent about the endless variety of Nāṭikā and varying number of acts, but plainly calls it catur anṣikā. The additional points of Bhāvaprakāśana are that a Nāṭikā can have a Vidūṣaka but not Vīta and Pithamāda.

The Nāṭyaśāstra and Daśarūpaka do not mention Sattaka.² It is but an accident that Rājasekhara's Karpura-mañjarī is the earliest known Sattaka; and so far we know, he is the first to record its definition. According to him, Sattaka much resembles a Nāṭikā, but it does not possess Praveśakas, Viṣkambhakas and Aṅkas. It is a composition in Prākṛit (pāṇḍa-baṇḍha) and it is a representation to be danced (sattakam naccidavvam). Let us see what the subsequent authors have to say in addition to and amplifying Rājasekhara's remarks. Abhinavagupta says that Sattaka is like Nāṭikā, and possibly to explain Bharata's silence about it, he adds that it is defined by Kohala and others. Hemacandra quotes perhaps an earlier verse which specifies that Sattaka is written in one language (eka bhāṣayā) which is α-Prākṛta Saṁskṛtā. It is a knotty term to explain, but I think, it implies that in a Sattaka both Sanskrit and Prākṛit are not used as in a Nāṭikā. Rāmacandra-Gunacandra quote the same; they spell it Sātaka, and attribute its definition to Kohala. Kohala is an ancient celebrity connected with dramatic theory. Māṅkandeya mentions him along with Śākalya, Bharata, Vararuci, Bhāmaha, Vasantarāja etc in the opening verses of his Prākṛit grammar thus his name is associated with Prākṛits as well. It is but natural, therefore, that he is credited to have recognised and defined Sattaka, which was entirely in Prākṛit.

1 The Sanskrit extracts are given in the Appendix,

According to the Bhāvaprakāśana, Sattaka is a variety of Nāṭikā based on nṛtya. It possesses Kaiśikī and Bhārati Vṛtti, i. e., Gay and Eloquent styles, and has no raudra, furious sentiment. There are no saṁdhis; and corresponding to the division of Aṅkas, there are Yavamkāntaras. There are no chādana, skhalana, bhrānti and nilmava. It uses Śaurasenī and Māhārāṣṭrī languages elsewhere he describes it as prakṛta-Prākṛitamayī. Some opine that the king should not speak in Prākṛit, while others hold that he might speak Māgadhī or Śaurasenī. According to some authors, Sattaka is a variety of Rūpaka, similar to Nāṭikā, but its language is Prākṛit.

Sāgaranandin states that Sattaka avoids the vīra heroic, bhayānaka terrible, bibhatsa odious sentiments, besides the raudra furious. It has Śaurasenī, Prācyā and Mahārāṣṭrī. The king, like women, is to speak Prākṛit. Though Bāḍaīyana and others prescribe for the king usually Sanskrit and occasionally Prākṛit, still the king is to speak Prākṛit. The Sāhitya-darpana states that the Sattaka is to be entirely in Prākṛit (Prākṛtāśesa-pāthyam) and to possess plenty of adbhuta, marvellous sentiment. Rudradāsa makes it clear that it is in Prākṛit and it is to be danced. Ghaṇaśyāma remarks that the whole of it is in Prākṛit, and therefore it is called Sattaka. Whenever an illustration is noted in the above sources, it is that of Karpūra-mañjarī.

1 It may be noted here that Vāsudeva notes saṁdhyangas like kāraṇa, avamarśa, vadhāna in his commentary on the Karpūramañjarī, pp. 27, 55, Nīlāyasaṅgṛhaṇḍī, Bombay 1900.

d) PRĀKRITS IN THE DRAMA

The extensive population of Indian sub-continent has been, especially in early days and all along, divided into linguistic units and sub-units according to the languages and dialects. The linguistic compartments are due partly to geographical area, religious grouping, social strata, race-clan distinctions, professional guilds etc.; and naturally there has been ample margin and definite scope for cross-current influences. The population presents a veritable museum of languages and dialects. When viewed historically, we see further a cleavage between popular speeches and literary languages, at times the same language may present these phases side by side. The literary languages under grammatical restrictions get fossilised and become stagnant as book-languages. They are now and then imitated in writing by men of letters who otherwise use popular languages for their day-to-day use. The popular dialects flow along their own currents, and now and then some of its stages are raised to a literary status which survives as a book-language. This process is going on for the last few thousand years over a vast area, as evidenced by literary records of different ages and places, beginning with Veda and upto modern times.

The Indo-Aryan speech,¹ to put in broad terms, has flowed in two beds, Samskrta and Prākṛta which have constantly influenced each other at different stages. The term Prākṛta (spelt as Prākṛit) meaning, 'natural' 'common' etc. primarily indicates uncultured popular dialects, existing side by side with Samskrta (spelt as Sanskrit), 'the accurately made,' 'polished' and 'refined' speech. The Prākṛits, to begin with, are the dialects of unlettered masses used by them for their secular communication in their every day life; while Sanskrit is the language of the intellectual aristocrat, the priest, pundit or prince, who used it for religious and learned purposes. The language of every day conversation of even those must have been nearer the popular Prākṛits than the literary Sanskrit. The former is a natural acquisition; and the latter, the principal literary form of speech, requires training in grammatical and phonetic niceties.

Contemporary with the Vedic language, which is an artistic speech employed by the priest in his religious songs, there were popular dialects probably due to tribal groups, social strata etc. and arising out of literary and home usage or the use of Āryan speech by indigenous groups. The book-language has often to be distinguished from the spoken dialects. The Vedic literature gives some glimpses of popular speeches, the primary Prākritis, but no literature in them has come down to us. The classical Sanskrit, as standardised by Pāṇini and his commentators, respectfully shelves all that was obsolete in the Vedic speech and studiously eschews all that belongs to the popular tongue. The use of such a rigorously standardised language was the job for selected intelligence, it is the language of the hieratic academy and not of the populace at large, and its fine specimens are seen in our Kāvya, Nātakas, Campūs and Nyāya treatises.

1 Here I am quoting a few remarks from my essay on Prākṛit Literature, contributed to the Cyclopedic History or Dictionary of World Literature which is being edited by Mr. Joseph T. Shipley, U. S. A.

The ancient Indian drama presents a striking picture of the mixed use of language, different characters speaking different languages and dialects in the same play¹. This is looked upon by some as something analogous to the use of Doric and Aeolic in certain parts of Greek plays. If we look at the drama in the light of the above remarks, we find some explanation for the use of different Prākrit languages. It bears resemblance, so far as its beginning is concerned, to the natural use of local or vulgar forms of speech in the mouths of uncultured persons. Broadly speaking Sanskrit is spoken by men of high rank and by religious personages, while women, queens not excepted, speak one kind of Prākrit with ordinary characters, minor dialects being used by inferior or special classes.

According to their advocacy of secular or religious origin for the Indian drama, scholars hold that it was entirely either in Prākrit or Sanskrit in the beginning. Neither the earliest treatise on dramaturgy nor the oldest specimens of drama bear out the exclusive claim of one or the other. They admit Sanskrit and Prākrit side by side.

The details about the use of Sanskrit, Prākrit dialects and other languages by different characters look more like a compilation of stray practices and prescriptions than a systematic codification of rules: one feels all the more convinced about this, when the details are judged in the light of subsequent practices in dramas and grammatical description of Prākṛits. Bharata's details (XVII. 26-64) may be interesting for their own sake, but later writers on dramaturgy have become more concise. The *Daśarūpakā*¹ gives the following rules 'Actions are to be characterized by the language, gesture, and costume of a [special] region, [the dramatist] is to employ these suitably, taking them from common life. Sanskrit is to be spoken by men that are not of low rank, by devotees (kṛtātmanām), and in some cases by female ascetics, by the chief queen, by daughters of ministers and by courtezans. Prakrit is generally [to be the language] of women, and Śaurasenī in the case of male characters of low rank. In like manner Pāśācī, very low person, and the like are to speak Pāśācī and Māgadhī. Of whatever region an inferior character may be, of that region is his language to be. For a special purpose the language of the highest and subsequent characters may be changed.' Some of the prescriptions of Bharata that Bhikṣu and Sramana are to speak Prākṛit, that a Śrotriya is to use Sanskrit and that Cāndālī is resorted to by Pulkasa etc. are certainly significant, and they may be looked upon as reflections of social facts, existing perhaps long before the age of Bharata. What were simple facts once became stereotyped conventions, growing obscure as time passed on. The theory and practice put together clearly show that these conventions are often analogical extensions, right or wrong, and were not quite strict and rigorously applied. The prescriptions from different sources and practices of different places and ages² have intricately commingled to create a highly complicated situation; and no single hypothesis, howsoever, ingenious, can easily explain all the details in a satisfactory manner.

The Indian drama, there are reasons to believe, had its preliminary aspect in a popular pantomime; and this would easily explain such dialectal practices that all women, including a queen, are to speak in Prākṛit, and so also Vidūṣaka, a Brāhmaṇa, of high social rank. The actresses who played the female rôle perhaps came from the lower strata of society, and naturally it is befitting for them that they spoke in Prākṛit, or Śaurasenī, the normal prose dialect of the plays. The case of Vidūsaka stands on a slightly different footing. He is essentially a creation of the popular theatre, whence, just for mirth and joke, he was received and retained, even in court plays, as a conventional figure crystallised into a permanent type. Whatever may be his other traits, Vidūsaka is a king's companion and guide through thick and thin. I think, he represents a caricature of the learned Puṇhita who was the sole adviser of the king in almost all home-affairs. The king depends on this confidant in all his affairs of the heart, and Vidūsaka claims that he is a learned Brāhmaṇa. This claim is confirmed by his name also. The name Vidūsakah is just a hyper-Sanskritic back-formation of Prākṛit vuṣo or vuṣao (with l-suffix) which is to be connected with *vidvas*¹. There could be no better proof for his being a popular creation than the Prākṛitic basis of his name, and it is in the fitness of things that he speaks in Prākṛit.

We need not hesitate to believe that the origin of the mixed usage of Sanskrit and Prākṛit in the drama might have started as a reflection of the actual practice in real life. Conversations in simple Sanskrit and Prākṛits could be easily understood by all. This points out to a period long before the use of the form of court-poetry which assumed an artistic, dignified and elaborate style in the hands of authors like Kālidāsa, Bāṇa and Bhavabhūti. This style was first evolved in epics, lyrics, Kāvyaś and prose romances, and side by side with them it cannot but affect the drama too. Even by the time of Bharata's Nāṭyaśāstra the use of Prākṛits had become just a matter of conventional fixing, and it was mechanically followed by most of the authors. In view of the characters introduced therein and the society for which they were meant, plays might have been composed by certain authors solely in Sanskrit or Prākṛit. The Sanskrit plays like the Dūtavākya of Bhāsa and some of the early Bhāṇas have come down to us. It is but natural that the early specimens of entirely Prākṛit plays have not survived: they were popular creations of unlettered masses; Prākṛit compositions have been uniformly neglected all along, and even some of the best Prākṛit poems, only the names of which are known to us, are lost beyond recovery, and the orthodox theorists perhaps never liked to give a status to them among the recognised types of drama.

1 Words like aṅṅikā, danuvāṇikā, bhattidāṇikā, māṇsa or marisa etc. definitely possess a Prākṛit tinge; and āma is a Deśi word of Tamil origin.

e) SAṬṬAKA IN THE EVOLUTION OF DRAMA

The treatises on dramaturgy elaborately describe Nāṭaka first, and subsequently they just note in what respects the other types are similar to or different from it. This does not mean that all other types are just the variations of and derived from Nāṭaka. The theorists adopt this procedure for convenience of treatment. They are not presenting these types and sub-types according to their historical evolution perhaps they never had such an approach in view. They have conveniently classified the information and presented the topics in a suitable manner without worrying when and where the types and sub-types of drama arose.

Various forms of dramatic representation, from just simple to the most complicated, have been in vogue since long in different parts of India, and some of the primitive types survive even to this day in out-of-the-way villages enacted by village folk in their own way. The recognition of only ten Rūpakas by theorists indicates that these were standardised types worthy of the attention of cultured classes and court circles. Later theorists do recognise certain Uparūpakas. What is subsequently recognised is not necessarily later in age. Some of the popular forms of drama could not be easily and bodily recognised by orthodox theorists: that easily explains the attitude of theorists towards the so called Uparūpakas.

It is one thing to trace the early prototypes of dramatic conversation, recitation and action in the R̥gvedic dialogues, epic poetry and Vedic ritual, and also try to detect similarities with Greek drama and indigenous mimes, and it is another to trace the possible evolution of Indian drama by arranging its types and sub-types in a logical and evolutionary sequence, after thoroughly studying all the theoretical details and available plays.

Lately Prof. D. R. Mankad¹ has tried to trace the history of the evolution of Indian drama. Though one may not agree with him in all the minor details, the method adopted by him gives interesting results. He starts from nr̥tta which branches off into two currents 1) tāṇḍava (uddhata) > nr̥tya > Bhāṇa > Uparūpakas like Preksanaka, Ullopyaka, Sallāpaka, Śilpaka > Rūpaka types: Vyāyoga > Samavakāra, Ihāmrga, Dima; 2) lāsya (masr̥na) > nr̥tya > Bhāṇikā > Uparūpakas like Bhāṇa, Dombī, Nartanaka, Prasthānaka, Hallīśaka, Kāvya, Gosthī, Kalpavallī, Śīgadhī, Durbhallikā, Mallikā, Vihāsikā>Rūpaka types Bhāna>Vīthi>Prahasana, Anka, and both these currents once more conflow to produce the finished types, Nāṭaka and Prakaraṇa. In his opinion (p 164) Bhāna seems to be the first dramatic type to evolve, and he states four characteristics of the first drama 1) It was entirely in Sanskrit, 2) it was descriptive in nature, 3) it was monologous in form, and lastly 4) it was secular in matter. In the light of the gradual evolution of nr̥ita, nr̥tya and nāṭya types outlined by him, Prof D R Mankad distinguishes between certain stages of growth or periods in the nāṭya types themselves (p 165) 1) The nāṭya, in its earliest phase, had a form which required only one actor and one act, 2) then it required many actors but had still only one act, 3) thereafter it came to be represented by less complicated types with many acts, and lastly, 4) the fourth phase is represented by the full-fledged Nāṭaka and Prakaraṇa types, which, when fully developed, gradually sent the other lesser types into oblivion.

1 The Types of Sanskrit Drama, pp. 147 etc.

The problem of ascertaining the position of Sattaka in the evolution of drama is faced with many a difficulty, still an attempt is worth making. The term sattaka itself is a riddle, variants of spelling like sātaka, sāṭaka, sādika are known, but they do not improve the situation. The word is undoubtedly un-Sanskritic in etymology like some other names of Uparūpakas such as Dombī, Hallīśaka, Śīdgaka. Perhaps it is to be traced back to a Deśī word possibly of Dravidian origin. Stripped of its k-suffix, it shows elements like sa+atṭa or ātṭa, and perhaps it stood originally as an adjective of a suppressed term. There is a Dravidian word ātṭa or ātṭam, dance, play, from the root ātu or āḍu meaning to dance, gesticulate, to act a part or play. If the basic meaning was 'dance', the suppressed term may be rūpaka one can postulate a phrase sattāam rūvaam=a dramatic representation accompanied by dance. Or if the basic meaning was 'play', the suppressed term may be nartana. one can postulate a phrase sattāam nartanam (or naccanam or naccidavvam)=a dance accompanied by dramatic representation. Perhaps for brevity only the term sattāam has come in vogue. That Sattaka is closely associated with 'dance' is an accepted fact. In the Barhut Inscription¹ the term sādika occurs in the record below a bas-relief of the dancing scene; and the theorist Śāradātanaya describes Sattaka as nr̥tya-bhedātmaka. Turning to the prologues of Sattakas, Rājasekhara uses the expression sattācam nāccidavvam, Nāyacandra remarks aho prakrāntameva nartakam, and Rudradāsa says paattaha saṭṭāca-nattane.

About the theme, format and language of the Sattaka some broad outlines are available. It is a love intrigue, as suggested by its Gay and Eloquent (kausikī and bhārati) styles. It is preeminently associated with dance. It does not possess the orthodox, standardised divisions of anākā, introductory scenes like pravesakā and viskambhaka and various technical junctures seen in Nāṭaka etc. The whole action is divided into four pauses indicated by the intervention of curtain (yavanikāntara or yavaṇ). It is replete with Marvellous (adbhuta) sentiment. It is agreed that it was composed entirely in Prākṛit. Bādarāyana, however, allowed an option of Sanskrit in the case of the King.

The popular character and origin of Sattaka are obvious from its close association with dance, its loose format, its uncoerced construction and division, its sentiment of marvel, and above all its composition in Prākṛit. An orthodox theorist like Bharata could not recognise and condescend to describe Sattaka, because its mould and format were not of the accepted frame-work. It is only Hemacandra, who must have been favourably impressed by such an outstanding comedy as the Karpūramāñjarī of Rājasekhara, that recognises it on par with other Rūpakas. All others would include it among the related or subordinate types. Though Bharata silently passes over Sattaka, other earlier authors like Kōhala, whose works have not come down to us, did give due recognition to it.

Bharata's Nāṭyaśāstra represents only one of the many schools of dramaturgy, and if Bharata does not mention Sattaka, it is no evidence at all against the antiquity of Sattaka as a form of drama. The Indian drama has its roots in dance. Dance was its basic and primary element, and the association of Sattaka with dance is quite clear. Further, its loose technique, unconventional form and Prākṛit language point out to its high antiquity in the evolution of Indian drama. It is further confirmed by the fact that an ancient theorist like Kōhala gave due recognition to it. The Barhut inscription (circa 200 B. C.) mentions sāḍika, a form of dance, which appears to be a forerunner of sattaka. Being popular in vogue and language, earlier specimens have not come down to us. In all probability Rājasekhara was aware of some of them, for nowhere does he claim that his is the first creation¹ His definition only indicates that it was not quite familiar to his court circle

Bharata's treatise has left a great influence on subsequent authors He recognises Nāṭikā, and later theorists define Sattaka in the back-ground of Nāṭikā This does not mean that Sattaka is a popular and subsequent remodelling of Nāṭikā But it is the reverse that appears to be true and historically justified As a dramatic representation with dance, depicting love intrigue, enacted by a troop of guls, replete with marvellous sentiment and composed in popular Prākṛit, the Sattaka has something graceful and attractive about it The theorist may not have liked to admit it as it is, but it was bound to attract his attention The cultured classes and court circles would certainly enjoy it, it is to satisfy their craving the Sattaka was made to conform to the orthodox canons of Nāṭaka, and the result of such an effort is the Nāṭikā which is duly described by Bharata and others Thus Nāṭikā is an orthodox edition of the popular Sattaka The variety of the forms of Nāṭikā², as suggested by the Daśarūpaka, perhaps indicates different attempts to raise the popular Sattaka to a status acceptable to a court audience Once Nāṭikā was evolved and defined by an authority like Bharata, subsequent authors simply followed him; and Sattaka was, for a while, say during the period between Kohala and Rājaśekhara, superseded by Nāṭikā Under such circumstances Bādarāyaṇa and others wanted a bit of Sanskrit also to be introduced, through the royal mouth, in the popular Sattaka which was, in the beginning, entirely in Prākṛit.

f) SATṬAKAS KNOWN SO FAR

Ancient specimens of Sattaka have not come down to us. Prior to Rājaśekhara, the Sattaka, though recognised as a type of drama by Kohala etc., never received a literary status among the accepted forms, it is only his Karpūra-mañjarī that became a classical example of Sattaka The Prākṛit had assumed a static form by Rājaśekhara's time, and a play entirely in Prākṛit was bound to be a rigorous task for average poets in subsequent centuries: it is only some poets of rare or erratic genius that were tempted to compose Sattakas. That would explain, to a certain extent, why we have a small number of Sattakas of a late period. There are possibilities of discovering more by exploring mss. libraries. So far I have been able to list half a dozen Sattakas: 1) Karpūra-mañjarī of Rājasekhara, 2) Rambhā-mañjarī of Nayacandra, 3) Candralekhā of Rudradāsa, 4) Vilāsavati of Mārkaṇḍeya; 5) Śṛṅgarā-mañjarī of Viśveśvara, and 6) Ānanda-sundarī of Chanaśyāma¹. The analysis etc of Candralekhā have been already presented, so some important details about the rest of them may be given here. These details, I believe, would be useful not only for a comparative study of different Sattakas but also to a student of Indian literature, especially in Prākṛit.

Rājasekhara belonged to the Yāyāvara family. Akālaśalada of great virtues was his grandfather, styled as nachārāsra-aṣṭāmaṇi; his father was Darduka or Duhika, a great minister, and his mother was Śilavatī. He had married Avanti-sundarī of the Cāluṅga family. He reached eminence as a spiritual teacher or upādhyāya of Mahendrapāla or Nibhara-rāja, through the stages of bāla-kani and kani-rāja he was thus connected with the court of Kanauj at the time of both Mahendrapāla and his son Mahipāla. The dates available for these kings from epigraphic sources range from 903 to 917 A D; so it is evident that Rājasekhara lived about A. D. 900. It is probable that he wrote some poems like the Haravilāsa. At present only five of his works have come down to us, four plays and the fifth, an incomplete encyclopedic treatise on different aspects of poetry. 1) Bāla-rāmāyana, 2) Bāla-bhārata, 3) Karpūra-mañjarī, 4) Viddha-sālabhañjikā, and 5) Kāvya-mīmāṃsā. The Karpūra-mañjarī² is a Sattaka, entirely in Prākṛit and in four Javanikāntaras; and it was brought on the stage at the desire of the author's wife, Avanti-sundarī.

I. In this excellent Sattaka, which is a stream of poetic flavours, king Candapāla, which name reminds one of Mahendrapāla, takes to wife the Kuntala princess, Karpūra-mañjarī, really a cousin of queen Vibhramalekhā, in order to achieve the rank of an emperor. After the Nāndi and the Prastāvanā in which the author is introduced and

1 Two more Sattakas, as noted below, are attributed to him, but without inspecting their mss nothing can be definitely said about them.

2 See the eds of Karpuramañjarī referred to above, pp 5, 7.

the theme is suggested, the king and the queen describe the advent of spring. The bards also greet the king by elaborately depicting the scenes of spring. Vidūsaka and the maid-servant Vicaksanā dwell on the same theme, they fall out in their poetic competition and begin abusing each other, her superiority being recognised by the king, Vidūsaka is about to quit the royal company. But he gets a pretext to come back with a magician, Bhairavānanda, who praises the Kaula religion and parades his miraculous ability to achieve any feat. At the king's suggestion and Vidūsaka's request, the magician brings on the stage the lovely Vidāmbha princess in her bathing dress. The king falls in love with her and grows eloquent about her physical charms, and she also glances him affectionately. She discloses to the queen that she is the daughter of Vallabharāja and Śaśiprabhā of Kuntala country, the queen finds that she was her cousin sister Karpūramañjarī, and takes her into the palace for dressing and toilet.

II. The door-keeper tries, by describing nature, to divert the king who is passionately brooding over the charms of that heroine. Vidūsaka enters with Vicaksanā with whom he has a truce and who has brought from Karpūramañjarī a love-letter describing her passion for the king therein a stanza depicting heroine's pangs has been added by her friend. Vicaksanā describes how the heroine was dressed and decorated, and the king flames the details with his own fancy. Both the king and heroine are suffering equally. At Vicaksanā's hint, the king accompanied by Vidūsaka sees the heroine gracefully playing on the swing. Vidūsaka offers a poetic description, and the king continues his amorous plaints. It is learnt how she is suffering love-fever. Later the king sees her in the garden while she is embracing the Kuśabaka, glancing the Tilaka and knocking the Aśoka tree all this only heightens king's passion for her.

III. The queen has grown suspicious and has kept the heroine in a guarded room, but the king has got prepared an underground passage from it to the palace garden. The king broods over her charms and narrates to Vidūsaka a dream in which he met the heroine, Vidūsaka mocks him by narrating a fantastic counter-dream. Both of them have a discussion about the philosophy of love. Karpūramañjarī is suffering excessively, and she discloses her pangs to her companion Kūrangikā. The king, with Vidūsaka, hears it, approaches her to her pleasant surprise, and leads her to the pleasure-garden happily holding her by the hand. Two bards describe in long stanzas the moon-rise, the lovers under shining moon-light are in a mood of supreme felicity. The queen's arrival is announced. All disperse in haste, and the heroine retires to her room through the under-ground passage.

IV The king and Vidūsaka describe the summer and its effect on love-stricken persons. Vidūsaka tells him how the queen discovered the under-ground passage, closed it, and appointed an army of maid-servants to guard the heroine. The king is requested by the queen to attend the vaṭa-sāvitrī festival. After Gaurī is worshipped, the magician demands from the queen by way of dakṣinā that Ghanasāra-mañjarī, a daughter of Candasena of Lāta, should be married to the king who thereby becomes a universal monarch. The queen consents to this and announces her intention to the king. By playing the trick of hide-and-seek, to the great confusion of the queen, the magician produced Ghanasāramañjarī on the scene. The marriage function goes on merrily, but soon the queen, to her regret, is made to realize that Ghanasāramañjarī was only another name of Karpūramañjarī. The king thanks Bhanavānanda for fulfilling all his desires.

We do not possess today earlier definitions and specimens of Sattaka in the light of which Rājasekhara's performance could be judged. Rājasekhara defines Sattaka as analogous to Nāṭikā with certain reservations, and there is nothing in this play which is contradictory to Bharata's definition of Nāṭikā which perhaps he had in view. He has not specified the number of Javanikāntaras, but he has four, there are no Praveśaka and Viskambhaka; and excepting the stage-directions and names of characters, everything is in Prākṛit. The abuses in an involved style, the series of names of female guards and the hide-and-seek scene may be interesting, but they lack effect in a play to be enacted, one wonders how that scene can be managed at all on a simple stage excepting through make-belief. Rājasekhara is more a poet than a playwright; and like those of some of his predecessors his play Karpūra-mañjarī is more worthy of being read and studied than staged. He is a consummate master of language and expression, rich in vocabulary, idiomatic usages and metrical forms. His descriptions of the spring, moon-rise, swing-scene, the carcarī dance, etc. are admirable pieces of poetry testifying to his rigorous training in the niceties and conventions of poetics. Some of his pictures are vivid, and his love-lorn songs full of sentiment. He introduces, possibly as an element of popular Sattaka, a caricari which indicates a group-dance accompanied by songs and poses, described by him (IV 10-19)

Nayacandra and his Rambhā-mañjarī

Looking at the common verses of biographical interest in the Hammira Mahākāvya¹ (XIV. 46, 46* 1, 46* 3, 46* 4) and the Rambhā mañjarī² (I. 15-18), it is plain that it is the same Nayacandra that composed these two works. He gives some details about his spiritual predecessors. In the famous Kīrtanacaccha, there was one Jayasimhasūri who defeated in dispute Sāranga, an outstanding poet among those who composed in six languages and a great logician (prāmāṇika), and who wrote three works Nyāyasāra-tikā, a new grammar, and a kāvya of Kumāra-nrpati. Sāranga's identity is uncertain. Of the three works, the first is a commentary on Bhāṣaivaṣṭha's Nyāyasāra (c. 900), and the third is the Kumārapāla-caṇṭa, in ten cantos, finished in Samvat 1422 (A. D. 1364-65)³. Jayasimha's pupil was Prasannacandra, respected by kings. Our author, Nayacandra, though a pupil of Prasannacandra, calls himself a veritable successor of Jayasimha in poetic merits. He mentions his labours in the field of poetry and refers to the blessings that the goddess of speech bestowed on him. He makes reference to earlier poets like Kukkoka, Śīharsa [the author of Naṣadhiya], Vātsāyana, (Venīkrpāna-) Amara i. e., Amaracandra. He styles himself a second Amaracandra in poetry. This Amaracandra⁴ is the author of Padmānanda Mahākāvya (following which the Hammira-kāvya also is virāṇka) and flourished about the middle of the 13th century A. D. The Hammira-kāvya is a poem of great historical interest, and it celebrates the heroic career of Hammīra (incidentally that of his predecessors) who bravely fought against 'Alau'ddīn and died on the battle field in 1301 A. D. Nayacandra is aware of the standard of poetry laid down in Kāvya-prakāśa etc.; and he tells how he has tried to make his poem full of matter with flavour the critics should not mind his faults of expression (for which, if any, he wants to be forgiven) which have not been altogether avoided even by authors like Kālidāsa. He composed this poem full of amorous, heroic and marvellous sentiments to silence the court circle of Tomara Virama which asserted that no one at present could compose a Kāvya like earlier poets. He claims that his poetry possesses both the lālitya of Amaracandra and valermā of Śrīharsa. As to Nayacandra's age, he must have flourished between A. D. 1365, the date of Kumārapālacarita of his grand teacher Jayasimhasūri, and A. D. 1478, the date of the Poona MS of Rambhā-maṇjarī. The exact identification of king Tomara Virama would help us to bring these limits nearer. The editor of the Hammīra Kāvya has added a remark like this 'King Tomara Virama, whoever he was, appears to have lived seventy years before Akbar', but no evidence is given. In the list of the Tomara princes of Gwalior,¹ there is a king Virama, and the dates available for his grandson, Dungarendradeva, are 1440-1453 A. D. Deducting 50 years or so for two generations, we get about 1400 as the date of Virama. So we might assign Nayacandra to the beginning of the 15th century A. D. Nayacandra, as indicated by his spiritual genealogy, is a Jaina monk, but his mangala verses in the Hammīra kāvya are applicable to both Jaina and Hindu deities, and the nāṇḍī of Rambhā-maṇjarī invokes Viṣṇu as Varāha. The Rambhā-maṇjarī of Nayacandra is a Sattaka, so we might analyse its contents and study some of its aspects critically.

I. After the nāṇḍī in which Varāha is saluted and Madana is greeted by referring to the amorous glances of grown-up girls, Sūtiadhara invokes god of love and glorifies Śiva and Parvati. He introduces in elaborate expressions the king Jaitucandra or Jayacandra, alias Pangu, who is the son of Malladeva and Candalekhā, who usurped the kingdom of Madanavarman, who defeated Yavanas and who was ruling over Benares, and announces his intention to Nata that they should enact a prabandha in order to entertain the gathering of good people assembled at Benares for the yātrā (or annual festivity) of Viśvanātha at the time of summer solstice. The subject-matter, full of amorous flavour and with the great king Jaitracandīa as the hero, would prove to be of quite absorbing interest. The prabandha to be staged is a Sattaka, Rambhā-mañjarī by name, which is in a way superior to the Karpūra-mañjarī of Rājasekhara, its author is Nayacandra who, being blessed by the goddess of learning, is a skilled poet in six languages, and who has described himself by comparing his poetic gifts with those of Amracandra and Śīharsa. In this Satta king Jaitracandra, who has already seven wives, marries Rambhā as the eighth with a view to become the lord of earth.

The king Jaitracandīa, praised by bards in Sanskrit, Prākṛit and Marāṭhī, enters with his queens, and he is greeted by a cuckoo from a mango tree with blossoms. The king and queen greet each other and are greeted by the bard on the advent of spring. There ensues an abusive quarrel between Vidūśaka and Kaipūrikā; she laughs at his inheritance of scholarship from his wife's side and slights his poetic skill, both of them present their composition before royalty. Karpūrikā proves superior, Vidūśaka feels insulted and bids good bye to the palace. The queen describes moon-rise etc., and the king is anxious about Nārāyanadāsa who was to bring some news about Rambhā. Nārāyanadāsa accompanied by Rambhā in her wedding dress is brought in by Vidūśaka. The king received the name Jaitracandīa, because, on the day of his birth, his grandfather defeated the Kharpaśa army which came to the Daśārṇa country¹. Nārāyanadāsa has some happy news to convey it is announced to the king from behind the curtain that Rambhā, born in the Kimmīra vamśa, the grand-daughter of Devarāja and the daughter of king Madanavarman of Lāṭa, who is as beautiful as Pārvatī, was betrothed to (?) Hamsa, but is carried off by her maternal uncle Śiva and has been brought here with the wedding karikāṇa on her hand. The king receives her who comes in a palanquin, he begins to describe her limbs with an amorous eye, Vidūśaka and Nārāyanadāsa only switch on his appreciation for her; and his passion reaches a higher degree. The bard announces that it is an auspicious moment, the priests mutter the holy mantras; Vidūśaka declares that the king Jaitra and Rambhā are duly married, and there are jubilations for the occasion. Morning is announced by the bard, along with other queens Rambhā is sent to the harem by the king who retires for his morning duties.

II. Being separated from Rambhā, the king is pining for her by remembering her physical charms, and the door-keeper is trying to divert him by describing garden scenes. He is anxious to hear about her. The maid-servant Karpūrikā informs him that Rambhā is quite happy in the sisterly company of the harem where she is personally taken care of by the queen Rājīmatī, and by assuring him of Rambhā's deep attachment, she reads to the king her love-letter, despatched secretly, which only heightens his passion. Vidūṣaka narrates to him his dream in which he was a bee, later on he was changed into sandal wood the paste of which was applied to Rambhā's breast, and pressed by king's embrace he woke up. He interprets it that the king would soon meet Rambhā. The king is nervously anxious to meet her immediately. Karpūrikā, taking support of an Aśoka branch, manages to bring down Rambhā through the window. Both king and Rambhā enjoy amorous pleasures. The queen arrives, and they have to disperse.

III. The love-lorn queen welcomes the king, and after hearty amorous pleasures, the king asks her permission to meet Rambhā like this to which she consents and happily retires to bed. Rambhā comes to the king who receives her affectionately. Singing passionate lines alternatively, both of them go on happily enjoying amorous sports through different conventional stages. The night is easily spent and the dawn is announced by bards. Rambhā is sent to the harem, and the king attends to his duties after morning formalities.

More than once Nayacandra hints that the prabandha of Jaitra-, Jaya- or Jayanta-candra is being enacted; and therefore, it is quite likely that he draws his story from some Prabandhas. There is an old, anonymous Prabandha¹, some important facts from which are. The Rāṣtrakūta Jaitracandra, son of Vijayacandra, ruled at Benares in the country of Kānyakubja. He had a queen Karpūradevī, and he married also Subhāgadevī, the daughter of a Śālāpati. He overpowered Lakṣmaṇasena of Bengal and Paramarddi of Kalyānakataka. He was highly praised by the poet Canda. He refused to give his kingdom to Subhāgadevī's son;

so she invoked the aid of Suratrāṇa Sahābadīna who, was faced by Prthvīrāja and halted at Yoginīpura. Jaitra-candra felt happy when his adversary, viz. Pithvīrāja, was defeated, but his minister realized the danger to his kingdom. In his second campaign, the Suratrāṇa entered Benares in Samvat 1248, Caitra śu 10, and was victorious against Jaitracandra who died in the river Yamunā and whose eldest son, in the battle. That Suratrāṇa treated Suhāgadevī with disrespect for her treachery against her husband and her son was converted into a Turuṣka.

According to the Prabandha-cintāmaṇi of Merutunga¹, the great monarch (prāgya-sāmrāṇya-lakṣmīn pālayan) Jayacandra of Kāśī had a title Pangu, he married Sūhavā, the wife of a Śālāpatī, he refused to recognise her son as the heir-apparent, she invited the Mlecchas or Turuṣkas to attack Vāiānasī, when it was besieged, the king put her son on his elephant and plunged himself in the stream of Yamunā.

In the prabandha about Śrīharṣa, the author of Naiṣadhiya, the Prabandha-kośa of Rājaśekhara² gives some facts about Jayantacandra, the son of Govindacandra and the king of Benares, who was famous as Paṅgula. He married a young, beautiful widow, Sūhavadevī, the wife of a Śālāpatī from Anahilla-pattana on which Kumārapāla was ruling. To the displeasure of Sūhavadevī, he decided to give the kingdom to prince Meghacandra and not to her son. She managed to invite the Suratrāṇa of Takṣaśilā to attack Benares. The king was ruined in the battle, and the town was taken by the enemy.

About the name of the father of Jayacandra, the Prabandhas do not agree among themselves, nor does any one agree with Jayacandra's version. Modern historians³ give this genealogy. Govindacandra (c. 1114-1155), Vijayacandra (c. 1155-1170) and Jayacandra (c. 1170-1193), that means Prabandhakośa has either confused Jaya- and Vijaya-candra or more probably the name of the latter is skipped over in the text, and according to Rambhāmañjarī we will have to admit that Malladeva was another name of Vijayacandra. The Prabandhas have no reference to his seven wives and to the eighth wife Rambhā noted by Nayacandra. In one Prabandha, Kaipūradevī figures as a queen, but in our play there is a maid-servant Kaipūrikā by name. The hero Jaitracandra is a brave king of Benares, and he had a title Pangu these two facts are unanimously accepted by two Prabandhas. The first Prabandha is silent about this title, though some other details are common. The two Prabandhas and our play explain the title Pangu almost similarly. So it is plain that Nayacandra's hero is the same as Jaitracandra of Prabandhas, but our author appears to have added certain details to make the plot suited for a Sattaka the model for which was the Kaipūra-mañjarī. Our hero, then, as already hinted above, is the same as Rājā Jaichand, almost the last king of the Gāhadavāla dynasty, who had made Benares his principal residence and who was overthrown by Muhammad of Ghōl (Shihābu-ddīn). It is not clear who this Madanavarman of Lāṭa¹ is, but it is not unlikely that Nayacandra had in view a Chandel ruler of that name. Nayacandra's statement that Jaitracandra brought under control the kingdom of Madanavarman is based possibly on the account of the Prabandha according to which he overpowered Paramarddi who had inherited the kingdom of Madanavarman.

Nayacandra refers to the Kaipūra-mañjarī (Km.) of Rājasekhara, and he claims that his Rambhā-mañjarī (Rm.) is in a way superior to it. Rm. imitates Km. in many respects. The scene of spring that is being described by the king, queen and bards, the quarrel between Jester and maid-servant in which the former claims hereditary scholarship, and the diversion of the love-lorn king with the description of nature by the door-keeper: all these remind us of similar situations in Km. Some ideas, too, are common, at times with slight variations in both the Jester has a fantastic dream; the trees like Āśoka, Bakula and Kurabaka are introduced to heighten king's passion, and the contents of the love letter are almost identical. We come across even some common expressions in both the texts (Km. II. 11 & Rm. I. 40, Km. I. 32-34 & I. 49).

If the plot is scanty in Km., there is not even the semblance of it in Rm. Nayacandra's Prākṛit verses are not as fluent as those of Rājasekhara. Nayacandra has, however, a pedantic mastery over Sanskrit expression, and a couple of his Sanskrit verses (III. 3-4) are really beautiful and testify to his potential poetic ability.

1 This name reminds me of the name Candravarman of Lāṭa in the Viddhaśālabhaṅgikā.

As a play, Rm does not leave a favourable impression. One wonders how a cultured audience would receive the love dalliance of a king with his two queens, one after the other, on the stage. The tone of the amorous sentiment is devoid of depth and dignity; the depiction of it is more an exhibition than suggestion. In some places, strangely indeed, without making the characters speak and act, the author begins to describe their behaviour outside the stage-directions (II 18-20, III 7, 21)

Though the Poona ms and, perhaps following it, the printed text of the Rambhā-mañjarī call it a Nāṭikā samāptā Rambhā-mañjarī nāma nāṭikā, Nāyacandra has plainly called Rm a Satta or Sattaka (I 19). The play comes to a close within only three Javanikāntaras, so far as the present documentary evidence is concerned, but the ambition of the king to become the lord of earth is not explicitly fulfilled, though the King marries Rambhā in the very first Javanikāntara and sports with her in the second and third. Either the play is incomplete, or the author has overlooked what he has put in Sūtiadhāra's mouth¹ the abrupt ending of the play just in three Javanikāntaras and the absence of Bharata-vākya go to strengthen the former alternative.

Nāyacandra employs both Sanskrit and Prākṛit in this play, and the use of them by different characters is interesting. The Nāṭa, the queens Vasantasenā and Rambhā, Pratihārī, Vidyāsaka and Cetī speak Prākṛit, and their verses also are in Prākṛit excepting one (II. 14) in the mouth of Cetī (with the phrase samskr̥tam āśrītya) which is in Sanskrit. The Sūtiadhāra, king, Nārāyaṇadāsa and Mangala-pāṭhaka have their speeches in Sanskrit, but their verses are in Sanskrit as well as Prākṛit. One bard has a glorifying prose passage in Prākṛit, while others have their songs both in Sanskrit and Prākṛit. The Nāndī verses are in both the languages.

The Daśarūpaka, as seen above, admits a varying number of acts in a Nāṭikā which has been a model for later Sattaka; but whenever the number of Javanikāntaras is specified, it is necessarily four, and in this respect, the Rambhā-mañjarī, as a Sattaka, does not conform to its description. Further in the use of languages too, it does not satisfy the accepted condition of Sattaka. It is not entirely in Prākṛit. The Bhāva-prakāśana and Nāṭaka-lakṣana-kośa record an opinion that Sanskrit was allowed for the king in a Sattaka, but this play allows not only the king but also some other characters to speak in Sanskrit. It is really a note-worthy convention that Nāyacandīa is making even his Sanskrit-speaking characters utter some of their verses in Prākṛit. When a Prakrit-speaking character, the Ceti, utters a Sanskrit verse, the apologetic samskṛtam āsṛitya is there. Unless some more Sattakas of the type of Rm come to light, the promiscuous use of Sanskrit and Prakrit cannot be satisfactorily explained, nor is it confirmed by the views of any theorists so far known.

Nāyacandīa makes the bards sing the glory of Jātracandra in three languages, Sanskrit, Prākṛit and Marāṭhi, the Marāṭhi passage deserves our special attention. I am reproducing it below from the Poona ms (folio No 3a) without any corrections.

This is a specimen of literary Marāṭhi of the age of Nāyacandīa or, to be more definite, of the period of the ms, Samvat 1035 (A.D. 1477-78). Perhaps a line rhyming with the ninth is missing. The passage is certainly in Marāṭhi of an archaic type but not very old. It shows the full development of the characteristic features which belong to the language in its New Indo-Āryan stage and which cannot be traced to the Middle Indo-Āryan, for instance, the formation of the past tense in -l pekhila, pariskhalila, kelā, jālā, ālā and bhailu, with its agreement with the subject, secondly, the formation of the Genitive in mayurānce and devatace, both sing and pl., and lastly, the form jālā, twice used without the present-day aspirate which came into use some time in the beginning of the 19th century.

Mārkaṇḍeya is the author of the *Prākṛta-sarvasva*¹ which occupies an important position among Prākṛit grammars. Very little is known about his personal history. He composed his grammar in the reign of Mukundadeva who ruled over Utkala or Orissa. There was a king of Orissa of this name during the second half of the 17th century A. D. to which period Mārkaṇḍeya may be tentatively assigned. Prohibiting the use of Genetive for purposive Dative, he remarks thus in his grammar (V. 131)

कचिच्च तादर्थ्ये । तादर्थ्ये विहिताया चतुर्थ्या षष्ठी न स्यात् । 'पाणाञ्च गओ भमरो लम्भइ दुक्खं गइँदेसु ॥' 'सुहाव रजं किर होइ रण्णो ।' इति मम विलासवतीसङ्के ॥

The remark is quite plain, and we learn that Mārkaṇḍeya composed a Sattaka, Vilāsavatī by name. Viśvanātha (c. 14th century A. D.) mentions in his Sāhityadaipāṇa (VI 277-79, prose remark) one Vilāsavatī, a Nāṭya-rāsaka, which obviously must be an earlier and different work. The name of Vilāsavatī as a heroine is pretty old and figures in the stories composed by Haṁbhadra (8th century A. D.), Sādhārana (11th century A. D.)² etc. If we can discover a MS. of the Vilāsavatī Sattaka, composed as it is by an eminent Prākṛit grammarian like Mārkaṇḍeya, it would be of great value to assess the nature of Prākṛit in a Sattaka.

Viśveśvara and his Śṛṅgāra-mañjarī

Viśveśvara,³ the son of Laksmīdhara, belonged to Almodhā or Almora, and flourished during the first quarter of the 18th century A. D. The editors of Kāvya-mālā have recorded that his eighth descendent, Deveśvara (Cunilāla) by name, lived some time earlier than 1910 at Anūpaśahara on the Ganges. It is said that Viśveśvara began his literary enterprises at the age of ten and died prematurely at about forty. He is a voluminous writer, and there stand against his name more than twenty works of which Navamālīkā is a Nāṭikā and Śṛṅgāra-mañjarī is a Sattaka¹ I could get two MSS² of the latter; and its contents are analysed below

I After the nāṇḍī verses, in which are invoked Pārvatī and Madana, the Sūtradhāra, who is out to please the audience, hears the Natī describing the spring behind the curtain. As she compares spring with Sattaka, he takes a hint and decides, in consultation with her, to enact the same, depicting amorous sentiment, especially in separation. He explains to her that the Sattaka to be staged is the Śingāra-mañjarī (Sk. Śingāra-mañjarī) which gives rise to great wonder, which has well-shaped characters, and the limbs of which are set at various places (vibhā-saṁsthāna-saśaṅgā, p. 2). Its author is Viśveśvara, the son and disciple of Lakṣmīdhara of great learning, and it is being staged at the behest of the learned assembly which has rightly judged its merits. Sūtradhāra feels highly pleased that his beloved well suggested what he had in mind.

In a park, then enters the king, Rājasekhara, praising sleep which acquaints one with abnormal experiences (in dream). He is yearning for an unknown person. Inquired by Vidūṣaka and with intervening remarks from him, the king narrates to him his latest dream. He saw therein a girl of exquisite beauty, and felt very happy almost like India, the girl appeared to be in a mood of disappointment, Vasantatilakā, maid-servant of the queen, led her in saying that it was time for royal assembly; and she went out with heavy steps, looking at him. The king, who is suffering from pangs of separation, expresses his fear that the queen might come to know about this. He is assured by Vidūṣaka that he might soon meet that girl, but he is pessimistic, for he knows neither her name nor place. He has now come to the park where he had seen her. Vasantatilakā comes there; the king suspects whether she overheard his talk; Vidūṣaka holds a subtle and shrewd conversation with her; and therein it is disclosed that she did overhear the passionate expressions of the king. The king admires her sharp grasp, takes her into confidence, and tells her his vision in the dream. She realizes that he might have seen her friend Śrngāra-mañjarī, she requests him to paint her portrait, and from that she discloses that it was that of her friend Ś-mañjarī. She writes on it a verse from her friend who, she conveys to the king, is also in love and pining for him helplessly. She takes king's permission to convey all this to her. Evening is announced.

2 Both of them belong to the Government collection in the Bhandarkar Oriental Research Institute, Poona 4, their Nos. are. 810 of 1886-92 and 435 of 1892-95. The latter is a good MS. containing the Prākṛit text which has interlinear Sanskrit chāyā in red ink on some three pages at the beginning and some six pages in the middle. It is dated Śaka 1639, i. e. A. D. 1716-17, and thus almost contemporary with the author.

II With that painting-board in his hand, the king is brooding over Ś-mañjarī's beauty and poetic skill. Now and then Vidūṣaka is adding his comments. Both of them discuss how queen Rūpalekhā is jealously guarding the heroine, Ś-mañjarī, whom, consequently, they are not able to see. The king tells Vidūṣaka that a woman is always unhappy at the presence of a co-wife. While the king is conveying his plan to Vidūṣaka, he receives an invitation from the queen, through Mādhavikā, to attend the worship of Madana in the park, he goes thither immediately, being led by Vidūṣaka, he is reminded of the heroine seen in that park, both of them wax eloquent on the scenes of spring, visible in the park. They halt under a Mādhavī bower awaiting the queen who arrives with her retinue and begins describing spring. They all proceed to the spot of worship, and the king takes seat with the queen. Vasantatilakā taunts Vidūṣaka on the throbbing of his left eye. he feels offended and talks of his learning. He has a quarrel with her. He feels defeated and wants to quit the royal company caring a fig for the prospect of dakṣinā, because his merits are not recognised. At queen's request, he stays there, and with great reluctance, she had to call Ś-mañjarī to act as a judge, expert in sentiments, to settle the dispute between the Jester and maid-servant. Mādhavikā brings Ś-mañjarī who is quite happy at the opportunity of seeing the king. The queen does not want King and Ś-mañjarī to see each other for long, she requests the king to begin with her Madana's worship, so that the dispute might be decided in the mean time. Vasantatilakā and Vidūṣaka begin their dispute about śrngāra in the presence of the judge, Vidūṣaka feels that the real purpose, namely, that the king might see the heroine, is served, he gives no replies, and thus loses in dispute. As the business of arbitration is over, the queen asks the heroine to go back, and she, along with the love-lorn king, continues her worship. The blessings of all-powerful Madana are invoked from

III After a little discussion with the king on some aspects of love, Vidūsaka informs him how the queen is strictly guarding the heroine, and how even Vasantatilakā's movements are restrained, lest she might bring about a meeting between king and heroine Still Vidūsaka managed to see Vasantatilakā. He learnt from her that the heroine is terribly suffering from separation; and every cooling measure is having an adverse effect on her She is almost ready to end her life in order to get rid of this anguish of passion by hanging herself with a creeper-ropc. To save her, she has been assured of a meeting with the king under the Mādhavi bower. She is living on that hope, and the king, if he is sincere, should kindly save her Seeing that pradosa is announced, Vidūsaka requests the king to go to that spot and save her. Both of them proceed thither, describing various scenes. It is getting late at night, and they are wending their uneven way in thick darkness They reach the rendezvous There enters Śṛṅgāramañjarī with a blue veil and accompanied by Vasantatilakā. they are chatting about darkness in which the heroine's face is a moon indeed. The king is happy to hear their sound. With auspicious omens they reach the appointed spot. The king catches the opportunity, goes ahead, and leads the heroine to the bower, and they are left to themselves The bashful heroine is patronisingly consoled by him, and he solemnly assures his whole-hearted love to her and further confirms it by falling at her feet As she is ready to go, the king requests her to continue her love Vasantatilakā expects the same from him The king assures that for him, as for a bee, she is a lotus in preference to all other flowers

IV The king remembers his meeting with the heroine and thinks about her beautiful limbs He feels sorry at the cruel behaviour of the queen who has, by this time, imprisoned Vidūsaka and Vasantatilakā and kept Ś-mañjarī in a guarded dark room, under solitary confinement Vidūsaka enters lamenting over his lot especially in the prison He approaches the anxious king and tells him how he has been luckily free Inquired about the heroine, he narrates the following details 'To-day the queen went to worship Pārvatī, immediately after the jublations, a divine voice discoursed to the queen about the duties of a devoted wife, taking the hint, she decided to bring together Ś-mañjarī and the king, and she released all' The king felt happy and surprised at this sudden development. The penitent queen comes along with heroine and attendants, and the king welcomes them all. She presents Śrngāra-mañjarī to him, and bestows on her the status of equality, that of a co-queen. He accepts her according to Gandharva marriage, he gives a gift of jewelled wristlet to Vidūsaka. Vidūsaka is going home but returns with minister Cārubhūti who greets the king as a Cakravartin and discloses the following details. Śrngāra-mañjarī is the daughter of Jātāketu, the king of Avanti, her husband would become a Cakravartin, she was being carried away by Mammālīn who had become a demon according to some curse which came to an end on the way, and she was dropped down in a hermitage, thence she was brought to the palace and kept with the queen. The queen regretfully realized that Ś-mañjarī was the daughter of her brother-in-law (āvutta), and she apologised to her for the treatment so far given. The heroine thanks her in return. The king prays for an all-round welfare.

As Sattakas, shaped according to the definition of Nāṭikā with certain reservations, both Karpūra-mañjarī and Śrngāra-mañjarī have much in common; and they inherit good many motifs, with or without minor changes, from the earlier plays¹ of Bhāsa, Kālidāsa, Harṣa etc. In certain details Km and Śm have close resemblance. Their titles, the names of queens, the quarrel between Jester and maid-servant, a philosophical discussion between king and Jester about love, etc. But everywhere Viśveśvara handles the situations and contrivances more skilfully, as contrasted with parallel situations in Km, the quarrel in this play is devoid of bald abuses, and the author is not tempted to give a dry list of names of female guards. Viśveśvara does not slavishly follow Rājasekhara's special ideas and expressions, though in a few places we are reminded of certain verses and idioms in Km. The king sees the heroine in a dream, he paints her in a picture, then her identity is ascertained. All this reminds us of the plot of Viddha-sālabhāṅgikā of Rājasekhara and the development of love-relation between Ūsā and Anuruddha, and between Kandaupaketu and Vāsavadattā. The idea of bringing the heroine as an arbitrator is well conceived and managed with dignity. Thus she is proved to be a veritable śrngāra-mañjarī, as her name connotes. Viśveśvara shows a good deal of poetic talent, smooth and flavoury presentation of details, and lucidity of expression. Some of his discussions are stiff. All his characters speak Prākṛit, and there are few Yavanikāntaras. One of his remarks indicates that samdhyanāgas may be admitted in a Sattaka; and it is already noted above that Vāsudeva detects some of them in the Kaipūa-mañjarī, though some theorists explicitly prohibit them.

Ghanas'yāma and his Ānanda sundarī

The poet Ghanas'yāma¹, who calls himself mahārāstra-cūḍāmanī and who possessed epithets like Kanthūava, was the son of Mahādeva and Kāśī, and a grandson of Caundāji Bālāji. Īśa was his elder brother, Śākambarī, his sister, Sundarī and Kamalā, his wives, and Candras'ekhara and Govardhana, his two sons. He was born in 1700 A.D., and lived as far as 1750. At the age of 29 he became the minister of Tukkoji I (1729-1735) of Tanjore. He was a voluminous writer, starting his literary career at the age of 18. As he himself reports, he composed 64 works in Sanskrit, 20 in Prakrit and 25 in vernacular, a detailed list of his compositions is already prepared by Prof Chaudhuri in his paper; and he covers various branches of literature: plays, poems, anthologies, Campūs, commentaries and treatises on technical subjects like grammar, rhetoric, philosophy, etc. Ghanas'yāma was offensively self-conceited, and he paraded his learning in various quarters. He looked down upon earlier authors, even of established eminence, and he held poor opinion about their literary achievements. He styles himself śarva bhāṣa karī, with a mastery over seven or eight languages and scripts. He feels himself quite competent, almost equal, if not superior, to Rajasekhara, in composing a Sattaka which is entirely in Prakrit. His attitude towards Prakrit is well expressed in the conversation between Vidūsaka and Sutrādihara. In his opinion, an eminent poet need not be ashamed of composing works in Prakrit. A heretic shuns a sacrifice, a voluptuary, virtues, a block-head, learning: one vainly condemns whatever is impossible for oneself. Those who are skilled in only one language are part-poets, while he who can compose in many languages is a full-blown poet of renown. According to Prof Chaudhuri's list, Ghanas'yāma appears to have composed three Sattakas 1) Vaikuntha-carita, 2) Ānanda-sundarī, and 3) an anonymous one.¹ Two mss.² of Ā-sundarī have been accessible to me, and its contents are summarised below.

I. After benedictory verses invoking Viṣṇu-Lākṣmī etc, Sthāpaka or Sūtradhāra and Vidūṣaka discuss a letter from an Association (sāmāyika-lekha) for staging an interesting play; and it is decided to enact a Sattaka, the Ānanda-sundarī, composed, at the age of 22, by Ghanaśyāma (described) who is as competent as Rājasekhara, who has won a title Kanthūava, and who can compose works in various languages Sūtradhāra, who is wishing for a son, suggests the plot by a simile. Śikhanda-candra marries the daughter of Candavega, he has a son from her, and he becomes a universal monarch

The king reflects on his fortune and discloses certain details. The minister Dīpdiraka has been sent out to subdue Vibhāṇḍaka of Sindhudurga who refused to pay the tribute, and he is expected to come back victorious. The king hopes that his anxiety for a son would soon disappear. The king of Angas has sent his daughter Ānandasundarī to win his affection, fearing that the queen might know this, Ā-sundarī has been dressed as a man, with a name Pingalaka, and given in charge of the chamberlain Mandāraka, and as foretold by an astrologer, she might have a son. Bards greet the king with morning prayers by describing the advancing day. Vidūṣaka has offended unwittingly another Brāhmaṇa Mandūraka; and the king settles the quarrel by a present to the latter. The king wishes to see a nāṭaka staging how Ānandasundarī was brought etc. composed by Pārijāta-kavi. Pingalaka and Mandāraka are also invited, and a garbha-nāṭaka is introduced. It depicts how

- 1 It has to be seen whether this anonymous play can be the Navagraha-carita which, though put by Keith under Nāṭaka (The Sanskrit Drama, p. 345), is described by M. Krishnamachariar (History of Classical Sanskrit Literature, p. 248) as Sattaka in Prākṛit. It is necessary that mss. of Vaikunthacarita and Navagrahacarita should be inspected and seen whether they are Sattakas
 - 2 One complete ms. containing Prākṛit text and Bhaṭṭanātha's Sanskrit commentary belongs to the Government collection at the Bhandarkar Oriental R. Institute, Poona, No. 432 of 1899-1915, and another a transcript of a ms. No. 683/4681 from The Tanjore Sarasvatī Mahāl Library, Tanjore. The latter is wanting in some portion at the beginning.

Ā-sundarī, was dressed as a man and brought to the harem. As the characters of the spectators are there in the garbha-nāṭaka, a good deal of fun is created by Vidūṣaka who often misunderstands the situation. The king broods over Ā-sundarī's beauty while the play is going on. The time for midday meals is announced, and all get up for bath.

II. The king tells Vidūṣaka that Hemavatī divulged their secret to the queen with the result that Mandāraka has been chained and Ānandasundarī is confined in the ornament box by her. He reflects over the miserable lot which has befallen that beautiful girl on account of queen's jealousy. Vidūṣaka blesses him with good luck. Then to divert king's mind, there enters the poet Pārījāta, alias Kaṇṭhīlava, vaunting his poetic abilities. In a high-flown style, full of long compounds, subtle allusions and mythological references, he praises the metropolis Śrīkhalāvātī and its specialties, the palace Damaruka, and the king Śikhāṇḍacandra of great glory and his virtues. The king is highly pleased and is ready to give any present, even his kingdom, to the poet who declines the offer by saying that he already possesses the kavī-mahā-sāmrāṭya. To divert himself the king proposes to Vidūṣaka that they should describe the various limbs of the heroine Ā-sundarī, and they do so by singing the lines of a verse alternately. The king is suffering acute pangs of separation which are heightened by midday announcements of bards. he realizes that the real remedy is to win queen's favour.

III. The king feels happy now, because he has been able to win queen's favour. With sly interpellations Vidūṣaka wants to know how this could be achieved. The king narrates the details how he met her in the bed-room, how she was angry with him, how he lay prostrate at her feet like a servant, and how thus finally her heart was won over and she promised to celebrate his marriage with the heroine Ānandasundarī. The queen enters with the heroine and attendants, the former in wedding dress the king must have an issue, so the marriage is approved by all. The queen bestows the heroine on the king, and the wedding ceremony is celebrated. The couple is blessed and greeted by all; and Vidūṣaka exchanges a few bitter jokes with maid-servants. The king, heroine, Vidūṣaka, etc. come to the Śingāra-vana where the heroine is made acquainted with various trees etc. The evening and rising moon are announced by bards, the king and heroine retire to the bed-chamber.

IV. Vidūṣaka finds the king anxious about heroine's worries whether king's love for her would remain firm, whether she would have a meritorious son, and whether she would deliver happily. The king has assured her duly. Vidūṣaka cuts a few jokes with him, and getting the necessary details he assures him that the period of pregnancy is full and that she would certainly deliver a son. The victorious minister Dindīraka arrives. A garbha-nāṭakā composed by Pārijāta-kavi is staged. It is shown how Dindīraka leads a fleet, how the demon Vibhāṇḍaka is overpowered and made to run away by a sudden terrific uproar, and thus the victory was won. The king is highly pleased with this triumph, and is almost ready to give his kingdom to the brave minister. Just at that moment the report of the birth of the prince is conveyed to the king. By eating a miraculous herb sent by her father Candavoga, Ānandasundarī is quite hale and hearty. The queen enters accompanied by heroine with the child and attendants, and congratulates the king on the birth of a prince. The queen names the prince Ānanda-candra and puts him on king's lap. Bards greet the king, and the play ends with a significant Bharata-vākya.

Ghanaśyāma almost vies with Rājasekhara in composing a Sattaka, it must be said to his credit that he has a sufficiently independent plot, and excepting a few echoes of expression, he borrows very little from the Karpūramañjarī. The introduction of two garbha-nāṭakas is a peculiarity of the Ā.-sundarī, especially because they represent episodes which are a part and parcel of the theme of the play itself. It appears from a casual remark of Vidūṣaka that Ghanaśyāma believed that a Sattaka without a garbha-nāṭaka is positively faulty (apahāsa-bhāṣana). Ghanaśyāma is more a Sanskrit poet; and some of his forms and expressions are so artificial in Prākṛit that at times his verses become intelligible only after they are rendered into Sanskrit. That only shows that later authors lacked close touch with the genuine style of early Prākṛit works and still finished their compositions mainly by studying Prākṛit grammars. In this respect Viśveśvara's expressions are more natural in Prākṛit than those of Ghanaśyāma. Rājasekhara and other authors do use certain Deśī words. In a way the same tendency is carried to its logical extreme when Ghanaśyāma freely and studiously uses a number of Marāṭhī nouns and roots; some of his usages are current even in present-day Marāṭhī. To a great extent the interest of the reader or spectator of this play is sustained by the light humour with which many of the conversations and remarks, especially of Vīdūṣaka, are replete. The author creates humour by words of double meaning, stray prickly remarks, caricature of holy things, exaggeration, innocent tricks and slips, sly jokes, somewhat vulgar references, outspoken frankness and by light remarks on serious occasions. Ghanaśyāma is well-known for his pride and show of learning, and it is not surprising that the poet Pāṃjūta, alias Kanthūava, is only his own replica. The entire play in four Javanikāntaras is in Prakrit Sūtradhāra, however, once quotes a Sanskrit verse which brought to Ghanaśyāma the title Kanthūava, and a second time repeats the request of the Association in Sanskrit. The king also speaks in Prakrit, only once in the fourth Yavanikāntara, he sings a verse in Sanskrit (Saṃskṛtam āśritya). This sporadic use, I think, has nothing to do with the view of some theorists that the king is to speak in Sanskrit.

g) CANDRALEKHĀ A SATTAKA

It is but inevitable that a late author like Rudradāsa has in view the earlier definitions¹ of Nūtikā and Sattaka, and that his Candralekhā is influenced by the existing models of the same. The characters of Mānaveda, Devī and Candralekhā are of the time-honoured mould and quite suited for a Sattaka. The principal sentiment in the Candralekhā is erotic or śṛṅgāra presented in its various aspects and through suitable styles or vr̥tti. The marvellous sentiment, as stated in the Sāhityadarpaṇa, is supplied in this play by introducing the jewel Cintāmaṇi. Other sentiments like raudra, vīra, bhāyanaka and bībhatsa are absent. We have a Sthāpanā at the beginning with Sūtradhāra and Pāripūrśvaka. There are no Praveśaka and Viṣkambhaka, and instead of Anka we have Yavanikāntara. All the characters have their speeches and verses in Prakrit. It is only the names of characters and stage-directions that are in Sanskrit. It is natural that they should be in the same language in which the characters speak. This rule was observed by Aśvaghoṣa,² but after him the practice appears to have fallen into disuse and replaced by the convention of using Sanskrit for them. None of the Sattakas has reverted to the practice seen in Aśvaghoṣa's plays. The adjective bandhuranāga perhaps indicates that Rudradāsa has no objection for introducing Samdhyangas which are prohibited by Śāradātanaya. Thus the Candralekhā fulfils the essentials of a Sattaka, and most of the motifs on which its plot is built are found in the Karpūra-mañjarī as well as in some Nāṭikās.

v) KARPŪRAMAÑJARĪ AND CANDRALEKHĀ

Reading side by side the two Sattakas, Karpūra-mañjarī and Candralekhā, one is struck by the remarkable similarity between them. Some of the scenes and their sequence in Cl. closely resemble, if not imitate, the parallel scenes in corresponding places in Km., and a few instances may be added here. I. The Prastāvanā of Km. and Sthāpanā of Cl., the king, queen and Vidūsaka offer descriptions with the seasonal back-ground of spring, the heralds greet the king, Jester quarrels with a maid-servant, a beautiful heroine is described, Bards announce evening, and the characters retire from the stage. II. The attendant tries to divert king's mind, the king broods over heroine's beauty, in Km. the king sees the heroine on the swing and in Cl. at the singing entertainment, both king and Vidūsaka sing alternative lines of a verse and describe the maiden with fanciful imagery.¹ III. The king and heroine meet in a park, the rising moon is described, and the meeting is dispersed by the queen's arrival. IV. The heroine is put into a prison by the queen and guarded by a battalion of maid-servants.

Then there are many ideas and expressions common to both, and the prologue at the opening is a good illustration therein. Īśvara and Pārvatī, quarrelling in love, are referred to, Sattaka is defined, the author introduces himself, informs the audience at whose instance the play is staged, and gives the gist of the plot, and in all this even some sentences are identically worded. A few common ideas may be noted here. The Caitra breezes touch the Cola girls, and they are enjoyed by cobras on their way (Km. I. 15, 20 & Cl. I. 23-4); Vidūsaka claims hereditary learning (Km. I. 18. 1 & Cl. I. 26. 2); the entrance of a heroine with moon-face (Km. I. 25. 6 etc. & Cl. I. 30, 31); musk cannot be sold in a village (Km. I. 18. 18 & Cl. II. 9. 26), Jester has a truce with the maid-servant (Km. II. 6. 14-15 & Cl. II. 10. 15), the king requests the heroine not to stand up lest there might be physical pain to her (Km. III. 21 & Cl. III. 12. 11-12), the king with horripilations resembles a Kadamba plant

1 Konow puts both the lines of a verse in the mouth of Vidūsaka. He has recorded some mss. which put one line in the mouth of the king and the other in that of Vidūsaka. Rudradāsa appears to have had before him such mss. of Km.

(Km. III 24 & Cl III 13); the appearance of earth at moon-rise (Km III 25 & Cl III 15), the achievement of the king in this play (Km IV. 23 & Cl. IV 29), etc. There are also a few common or nearly common expressions, besides those in the Prologue, between the two works see for instance, Km I 19. 7 & Cl. I. 26. 13, Km. I 36 1 & Cl I. 47 7, Km. II 1. 3 (note the variants) & Cl. II. 1. 4; Km. III 24 2 & Cl. III 14. 2, Km. III. 26. 1-2 & Cl. III 16. 2-5; Km IV 9. 2 & Cl IV 26. 1, etc. Some verses have a similar ring, at times with certain common words, and some of them have the same metre in corresponding contexts for instance, Km. II 10-11 & Cl. II 14-15, Km II. 32 & Cl II. 23, Km III. 29 & Cl. III. 21; etc and Km. I 1-2 & Cl I. 1-2, Km I. 17 & Cl. 24; etc. Even some of the stage-directions are nearly the same at similar contexts see for instance, Km I 25 10-12 (see the variants) & Cl. I 27. 16-17, Km III 20 24-25 & Cl III 12. 9-10, etc. In giving the list of maid-servants (Km. IV. 9. 8 etc. & Cl. IV. 26. 7 etc.) Rudradāsa, somehow setting aside his sense of moderation, mechanically follows the model of Rājasekhara. The opening words bhaddam hou or deu, with some symbolic auspiciousness, are common to both, and it is not unlikely that the title Candalokha, which in the case of Natikā and Satṭaka should be the same as the name of the heroine, has suggested itself to Rudradāsa from the title of the Mṛgāṅkalakhā Katha of Apabhraṃśa to which Rājasekhara has made reference in his prologue. Some of the motifs and situations are common, in a way they are found, with or without minor changes, in most of the Natikas and Satṭakas. The king becomes a Cakrvarīn after marrying a princess who is brought to his palace through some miraculous means, he falls in love with her, and she also loves him, the fever of love increases on both the sides, she sends a love letter to him, he sees her and also meets her, the suspicious queen watches her movements and finally imprisons her, at last the queen becomes favourable, and the wedding ceremony is celebrated.

There are certain aspects of Km which have not got their counterparts in Cl the round-about abuses exchanged by the Jester and Ceti, King's dream and Vidusakas counter-dream, and the discussion about the philosophy of love between the king and Jester. Whatever is ostentatious, excessive and extreme in Km. is often toned down and presented in a sober form in Cl. The vaunting Bhauvananda with his licentious creed is replaced by the jewel Cintāmaṇi presided over by a patronising and benevolent deity, the swing and Aśoka scenes have their purpose served by a singing entertainment. Rājasekhara, as a young court-poet and having his play staged at the instance of his cultured wife Avantisundarī, shows a youthful buoyancy in depicting the amorous sentiment, his descriptions of womanly beauty are frank, and pining plaints of separated lovers are outspoken. Rudradāsa, however, shows a great deal of self-restraint without sacrificing the flow of sentiment. He fully describes his heroine, but she is not half-naked, brought before the king in her bathing dress, he gives fewer opportunities for the king to see and describe the heroine. In fine his amorous sentiment is characterised by a subdued spirit and presented with moderation.

Rudradāsa has his innovations and improvements. The episode of the Sārīkā bird, which is placed in the throat of a statue put in the drawing-room of the king and which overhears king's talk to divulge it to the jealous queen, is not found in Km., but it is well used in Cl. to heighten queen's anger. A similar motif is employed by Rājasekhara in his Bālarāmāyana (V. 6). The scene of various feudatories paying respects to the king, introduced in Cl., has nothing dramatic about it; but possibly it is intended to tickle the vanity of Mānaveda who is not an imaginary hero but a ruler contemporary with the author. In Km., the heroine gives all her personal details to the queen, and their relation is clear almost from the beginning. This has forced Rājasekhara, through the mouth of Bhairavānanda, to give non-factual or imaginary names of the parents of Ghanasīma-mañjarī which is only another name of Karpūramañjarī whose parents are already once mentioned, and also to introduce that hide-and-seek scene so hard to manage on a simple stage. Rudradāsa has successfully improved on this. The heroine, when she comes first, is recognised only as noble-born, and her real identity and relation with the queen are disclosed almost at the end. In a way all this can be managed better on the stage.

Rudradāsa makes no reference whatsoever either to Rājasekhara or to his Karpūra-mañjarī as for instance Nayacandra has done. The above observations make it abundantly clear that Cl. is primarily based on Km. and inherits many of its details. But the Candralekhā, it has to be admitted, distinguishes itself mainly on account of its author's individuality which is that of a rigorously trained poet who is endowed with a sober mind, pious temperament, amateur skill, uncreative but orderly genius and subdued zeal.

vi) CANDRALEKHĀ, AS A LITERARY PIECE

When the spring season is bathing the earth with beauty, the miraculous jewel Cintāmaṇi brings to the palace of king Mānaveda a lovely girl, of noble descent and winning appearance. The king falls in love with her, and she also feels attraction for him. The queen is suspicious and guards her movements. The king suffers pangs of separation, and his mind is being diverted by Vidūṣaka and attendants. Once he gets an opportunity to see and hear the heroine singing in the Ruby park. Along with the passion of lovers, the jealousy of the queen increases. The lovers meet each other in the Plantain arbour. The queen now keeps the heroine in chains. The lovely heroine, it is disclosed, is Candralekhā, the cousin sister of the queen, and she was already betrothed to Mānaveda whom she would make a universal monarch. The queen consents to the marriage, and Mānaveda is wedded to Candralekhā. This is the outline of all that we get in the Candralekhā by way of plot. The story is neither engrossing, nor are the threads of the plot complicated. This is all quite in keeping with the spirit of most of our dramas, and the subject-matter is just of the pattern dictated by theory for a Nāṭikā, and consequently for a Sattaka. In working out the development of the intrigue and some of the details of the plot (for instance, the Sārikā episode, Vidūṣaka talking in dream, keeping the heroine unrecognised almost upto the end, etc.) Rudradāsa shows some cleverness. The characters are of time-honoured mould, their words, movements and acts have nothing extraordinary about them that they might get individualised and capture the attention of readers or spectators. In short there is no attempt at characterisation. Due to want of action, the Candralekhā is more a dramatic poem with a set of florid and poetic extracts than a play, it deserves to be read, nay studied, rather than witnessed; and its author stands before our eyes more prominently as a poet.

Rudradāsa has created many an opportunity for descriptions in which he could exhibit his poetic ability: the king Mānaveda, his metropolis, the spring scenes in the park etc., physical charms of a maiden, the condition of separated lovers, the singing entertainment, the evening, moon-rise, the feudatory kings etc. He takes peculiar pleasure in presenting long metres and prose passages loaded with lengthy compounds. These long speeches rumbling with compound expressions would certainly torture an audience.

What could have been gracefully acted in sharp conversation is described there at length. Racy conversation with pithy sentences pushing on the plot in a brisk manner is a thing perhaps unknown to our author. Even the Jester's quaiel with the maid servant has nothing particularly light and humorous about it. The pining plaints and the passionate outbursts of the king in the presence of Jester etc. afford nice occasions for the poet to introduce lyrical stanzas describing beauties of nature, graces of women and caprices of cupid. Rudradāsa's depiction of love or amorous sentiment lacks buoyancy and is presented under much restraint.

Apart from the artificiality of his Piākṛit dialect, Rudradāsa's style is forceful but heavy. His descriptions present a flurry of high sounding words, and there is little of originality and subtle touch in the imagery projected by him. Some of his ideas in the description of moon-light and heroine's graces have an air of novelty, but it is often obscured by heavy and elaborate expression. His rushing composition often reminds us of the style of Bhavabhūti and Rājasekhara, the latter, of course, is his immediate model. Though he does not possess much ease of Piākṛit expression, he can nearly rank with Rājasekhara in his love for long metres and his mastery over Prākṛit versification. Some of his gāthā varieties are quite happy in their sound and sense, and here and there, though to a less extent when compared with Rājasekhara, he shows some inclination for sound effect and alliteration.

This play, as the author tells us, was composed for the pandita-maṇḍala, the Learned Circle, in the court of Mānaveda. Rudradāsa thus sought the approval of men of learning who were intent on discerning poetic merits and beauties in his play. He has strained every nerve to give elaborate descriptions, highly decked prose passages and high sounding verses, it is a fine exercise in cultivated style through literary Prākṛit; but the result has fallen short of what a drama should really be.

vii) PRĀKRIT IN THE CANDRALEKHĀ

In estimating the cultivation of and the composition in a literary language, three factors are to be mainly considered: the grammatical mould, the literary nourishment and incidental influences. To be more explicit, in judging the composition of an author in a classical language we must try to ascertain what grammatical system he had studied, what tract of literature in that language he was acquainted with, and what incidental influences on his language have been there from contemporary regional languages, from the author's mother-tongue and from his specialised knowledge etc. A post-medieval Jaina author from Gujarāt and round about writing in Piākṛit shows sufficient mastery over Hemacandra's Prākṛit grammar. His language shows that he is acquainted with Ardhamāgadhi canon, post-canonical treatises and Prākṛit (or, as we call it to-day, Jaina Māhānāsī) works of authors like Haribhadra. The Sanskrit language in which he is normally adopt, the popular Apabhraṃśa poetry with its various peculiarities, the vernacular idioms and words, and the Jaina technical terms—all these, in some degree or the other, leave their stamp on his language and style. Many post-medieval Prākṛit authors from the North not only show, like earlier authors, traces of popular Apabhraṃśa in their language but also add, without any hesitation, their songs and specific descriptions in Apabhraṃśa almost in continuation of their Prākṛit composition. For us, from a distance, this is rather strange; but for them, and really speaking, composition in Prākṛit and Apabhraṃśa, side by side, was but natural and inevitable in the North in post-medieval times.

The South Indian authors like Lalasuka, Śrīkaṇṭha, Rudradāsa and Rāma Pāṇivāda who come from the extreme South, have contributed their mite to Piākṛit literature under great handicaps which we may try to appreciate. They belong to the decadent period of Piākṛit literature, Prākṛit had no attraction for them as the language of their religious scriptures, they lived in a part of the country where the current languages were of Dravidian stock and unconnected with any stage of Prākṛit, and their acquaintance with the Indo-Āryan languages was mainly through the study of classical Sanskrit grammar.

In the light of the above remarks, a study of Candralekhā shows certain facts. Rudradāsa is following the Prākṛit grammar of Vararuci, the first nine chapters, as available in southern mss. About the Piākṛit literature which he had studied there is very little direct evidence in his style and language. He does not appear to have studied any Prākṛit and Apabhraṃśa works of Jaina authors from the North: their influence is not seen at all. The Karpūra-mañjarī of Rājasekhara, as preserved in South Indian mss., was there before him, and he has closely followed it, even reproduced some sentences from it. It is quite likely that he studied Prākṛit portions of plays, gāthās from Hala's Kośa and poems like Rāvana-vaho. His strength as a Piākṛit poet is mainly based on his thorough grounding in Sanskrit language and literature, his ability to corrupt Sanskrit words into Piākṛit, directly or analogically, by applying the rules of Vaiaruci's grammar, and lastly, on his facility of handling various metrical forms including the varieties of gāthā. It is but natural that the Piākṛit of Candrālekha sounds artificial, much different from the lively expression in genuine Prākṛit literature

Minor dialectal differences apart, the classical Piākṛit stage, as distinguished from Sanskrit, characterises itself by certain phonetic peculiarities: the loss of vowel sounds r, ṛ, ai and au, the reduction of three sibilants to one, the final syllable to be necessarily a vowel, at times with anusvāra or nasalisation, simplification of conjunct groups through processes like assimilation, and the law of quantity which 'brings about shortening of long vowels before double consonants, reduction of several consonants to two and sometimes loss of one of the two consonants after an original long vowel or after a vowel which was originally short and has only been lengthened at the same time'.¹

Speaking about its phonetic aspect, with Sanskrit at one end and the rise of Modern Indian languages at the other, the intervening stage of Prākṛit in its wide sense or Middle Indo-Aryan can be split into various consecutive sub-stages.² Old or Early Middle Indo-Aryan (Early Prākṛit Stage), Transitional Middle Indo-Aryan, Second Middle Indo-Aryan (Prākṛit Proper), and Third or Late Middle Indo-Aryan (Apabhramśa). The first stage keeps the intervocal single stops intact, during the transitional period they get voiced or spirantised, and in the Prākṛit Proper they drop off from the speech. Apabhramśa presupposes almost entirely the Prākṛitic vocabulary, and then it is an attempt at the grammatical approximation to the language of the people. These sub-stages can be roughly illustrated by various Prākṛit dialects: Inscriptional Prākṛit, Pāli, Pāṣāṇī, Śaurasenī, Māgadhī; Māhārāṣṭrī; and Apabhramśa. This marking of sub-stages is true so far as theoretical evolution is concerned; but once these stages are given a literary status and used in literature, they may be cultivated as literary languages side by side and even with cross influences and regional colouring. The chronological sequence can no more be maintained. According to Dr Chatterji "This spirant pronunciation appears to have been in force for the entire Aryan speech-area during a century or two both before and after Christ—roughly, from 200 B. C. to 200 A. D. Orthography in inscriptions, and hesitancy about intervocal stops are an indication of this spirant pronunciation also some evidence is obtained from the employment of the Indian alphabet for an extra-Indian language like Old Khotanese, which possessed these spirants. The Indians did not care to invent new signs for these new sounds."

Turning to the evidence supplied by literature, that phase of Prākṛit or Middle Indo-Aryan, which shows the general tendency of dropping intervocalic stops, appears to have come into a literary prominence and was used in an artistic style sometime in the first two centuries of the Christian era. It had its blooming expression through its favourite gāthā metre, and the collection of seven centuries of gāthās attributed to Māla does presuppose a large body of lyrical songs. In general these gāthās are elastic in sound, natural in expression and fresh in outlook. A continued literary cultivation was bound to give such a language an artificial appearance. Perhaps it was Mahārāṣṭra, with its area round about Pratiṣṭhāna and under the Āndhrabhītyas, that was the original cradle of this dialect, but soon it gained ground and popularity, as a literary language, elsewhere too. The phonology of Ardhamāgadhī of the Jaina canon, which was rearranged at the Valabhī council in 453 A. D., came under its influence. The literary Prākṛit cultivated by Jaina authors does possess elements of earlier stage as seen in the Vasudevahindī, but even that (which we call Jaina Māhārāṣṭrī), in the works of Haribhadra etc., began to approach very near the dialect of lyrical gāthās. Even learned Sanskrit writers felt attraction for it. A highly trained poet like Piavarasena, who possessed a remarkable mastery over Sanskrit vocabulary and metres, chose this Prākṛit dialect for a learned kāvya, and we have his Setubandha today. Daṇḍin (earlier than 700 A. D.) compliments it as being written in the best Prākṛit current in Mahārāṣṭra. This Prākṛit has been called by the name Māhārāṣṭrī. The artistic poems like the Gaudavaho, Līlāvati etc. in gāthā metre, are also written in the same. Its popularity can be gauged by some more facts. Piākrit grammarians give it an elaborate treatment, and accepting it as a standard, note the deviations from it in the case of other dialects, rhetoricians quote plenty of verses in this dialect, and many more Kāvyaś, than those available today, were written in it. Delineating its back-ground, Jacobi¹ has suggested its influence even on Sanskrit poetry "It was probably through its contact with a popular poetical art, the one in Māhārāṣṭrī, that the Sanskrit poetry of the 'Renaissance' also gained those qualities of freshness and naturalness which are praised in the case of Vaidarbhī" The Prākṛit metre Gāthā appears as Āryā in Sanskrit, and Somadeva in his Yaśastilaka and Jayadeva in his Gītagovinda imitated some popular Apabhramśa metres.

According to early dramatic theory, to a very great extent confirmed by the Prākṛit speeches in plays, Śaurasenī was put in the mouth of ladies etc. Śaurasenī is mentioned by Bharata (c. 3rd century A.D.) who does not mention the name of Māhārāṣṭrī. The dramatic tradition of Bharata gives a place of recognition to Śaurasenī. Phonetically it belongs to the transitional stage in the evolution of Middle Indo-Aryan; but with the gradual popularity of Māhārāṣṭrī, it was sure to be affected by it as a literary language. Jacobi has already detected a Pre-classical Prākṛit,² which was used in place of Māhārāṣṭrī in early days, in the Dhruvas of the Nāṭyaśāstra. In some respects it is akin to Śaurasenī,³ a name already given to it by Bharata himself. It possesses many a trait of transitional character. The dialect of the sūtras of Dhavalā etc., the Prākṛit prose commentaries therein, and of the Pro-canonical texts of Digambaras⁴ is more akin to Śaurasenī than to classical Māhārāṣṭrī. Any way Śaurasenī, possibly a literary language based on the popular speech of Śūrasena country, has to be accepted as an eminent Prākṛit of the plays.

The Indian dramas, almost from the beginning, contain both Sanskrit and Prākṛit,¹ and are written in prose and verse. The dialect of the Prākṛit prose can be Śaurasenī, or Māgadī or something approximating to it according to conventions which had at their basis actual facts in the society in earlier times. In early days the songs too must have been in Śaurasenī like the Dhruvas of the Nāṭyaśāstra. But with the rise of lyrical gāthās in Māhārāṣṭrī, the preeminent Prākṛit of poesy, the plays were sure to admit some of them for the entertainment of the audience. Though they are absent in the plays of Bhāsa, their traces appear in the Mṛcchakatikam and Śākuntalam. The Prākṛit language of the plays in general and of the verses in particular was bound to be influenced by Māhārāṣṭrī tendencies. It is in this back-ground that we have to understand the remark of Viśvanātha in his Sāhityadarpana (VI 159) 'that women not of lowly origin should speak Śaurasenī in drama, but in their songs they should use Māhārāṣṭrī'. The verses used in plays could not escape the influence of that elastic dialect so happily perpetuated in the gāthās of Ilāla etc.

Śaurasenī and Māhārāṣṭrī might have had their basis in popular speeches in two different regions, but it is almost beyond detection now. Once they became literary languages and were imitated in literature, all the while evolving side by side, mutual contamination, especially in the plays, was inevitable. When grammarians use these terms, we must try to grasp their limitations. The grammatical tradition they themselves followed and the literature which they had in view give a specific significance to all that they add about them. Though it is true, to a certain degree, that they have a basic common tradition about Prākṛit grammar, almost all our Prākṛit grammars are partial attempts. Their sphere of influence is often limited and the literature which they have taken into account is meagre. Naturally we face a complicated situation today in distinguishing Śaurasenī and Māhārāṣṭrī as described by different Prākṛit grammarians. In the plays some influence is wielded by Sanskrit also on the Prākṛit passages, because the passages in both of them are preserved side by side. Pischel, it is true, has attempted a comprehensive Prākṛit grammar² which is admirable; but by rigorously applying his standards to earlier texts we are faced with grave difficulties. A good illustration to the point is seen in Pischel's 2nd edition of Śākuntala brought out by Cappaller¹. Without important new ms. material, dialectal changes in Prākṛit passages were effected in view of grammatical demands. With a zeal for thoroughness and uniformity Konow had to correct many forms, even against the readings of all mss., in order to make the prose thoroughly Śaurasenī and verses thoroughly Māhārāṣṭrī in the Karpūra-mañjarī. If the best mss. do not sanction a form, the editor, I think, has no right to restore it, simply because he holds a certain grammatical discipline as his standard. In his edition of Karpūra-mañjarī Konow has put all the verses in Māhārāṣṭrī and prose in Śaurasenī, following the definitions of these dialects mainly as given by Pischel. But in this edition of Candralekḥā, as explained above (p 5 f), I have been faithful to the ms. I believe, neither the standard of Hemacandra nor that of Pischel can be rigorously applied to the Candralekḥā. It is true, in a general way, that the verses here show some tendency to use the verbal terminations -i, -u rather than -di, -du, but not that they do not at all use the latter in verses and the former in prose. Rudradāsa writes both his verses and prose in the same language, the terms Śaurasenī and Māhārāṣṭrī as defined by Hemacandra, Mārkaṇḍeya or Pischel need not be applied to it; it should be called Prākṛta as the author calls it, it is nearly the same as the one described in the grammar of Vararuci, current in the south, and it is much influenced by the expressions of the Karpūra-mañjarī.

1 See the discussion above pp. 24-27

viii) METRES IN THE CANDRALEKHĀ

The Candralekḥā contains (41+34+24+30=) 129 verses, in different metres, distributed over four Yavanikāntas. They are arranged below according to Devanāgarī alphabets, with necessary references to Yava. and verse-number.

Āryā (2): II 32, III 22.

Udgīti (1) II. 26.

Upagīti (1): I. 11.

Gīti (27): I. 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 25, 26, 31, 32, 33 and 37, II. 6, 11, 12, 17, 18, 22, 24, 25, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31 and 33, III. 1 and 7.

Dodhaka (1). III. 21

Puṣpitāgrā (3) I. 2, III. 2 and 13.

1 Kālidāsa's Śākuntala, Harvard Oriental Series, 16, Harvard University Press 1922, Preface p. 15 f., and also p. 250 etc.

Prthvī (10): I. 17, 21 and 30, II 23, III 17 and 18, IV. 7, 25, 26 and 30

Mandākīāntā (2) II 8 and 13

Mālinī (4)* II 5 and 9, III 4 and 5.

Rathoddhatā (2) I 18, III, 23

Vasantatilaka (16) I 5, 13, 16, 35, 36 and 40, II. 16, III 3 and 6, IV 10, 12, 14, 16, 18, 20 and 22.

Śārdūlavikrīḍita (26) I. 1, 3, 6, 14, 20, 22, 23, 24, 28, 34 and 38, II. 1, 7, 10 and 21, III. 8, 11, 12, 14, 15, 16 and 20, IV. 1, 2, 5 and 17.

Śikharinī (3) I. 4 and 41, II. 15

Sragdhatā (27) I 15, 19, 27 and 39, II. 2, 3, 4, 14 and 34, III. 9, 10, 19 and 24, IV 4, 6, 8, 9, 11, 13, 15, 19, 21, 23, 24, 27, 28 and 29.

Harinī (2)· II. 19, 20.

It is in the fitness of things that our author has included many Gītas etc which are the varieties of Ārya, the same as Gāthā, the preeminent Prākṛit metre. One Gīta is short by two mātrās in the 3rd pāda (II 12). There are some cases of the violation of yati, for instance, I. 19 (4th line), I 38 (3rd line), II. 5 (4th line), II. 8 (4th line), III 4 (1st line), III. 19 (2nd line), III 20 (4th line), IV 1 (1st line), IV. 9 (first three lines), 11 (4th line) and 13 (3rd line).

4. RUDRADĀSA · THE AUTHOR

The information which the author of Candalekhā gives about himself in the Sthāpanā (I 5 4 etc) of the play is quite meagre. His name is Rudradāsa, he belonged to the Pārasava community (vamsa) the members of which took pride in their devotion to the feet of Brāhmanas, were far famed, and diverted themselves by literary compositions, and he was a disciple (śiṣya) of Rudra and Śrīkantha who were eminent in giving instructions.

We may try to shed some light on the above points from other sources. According to the Manusmṛti (IX. 178), Pārasava is an issue of a Brāhmaṇa from a Śūdra lady. Yājñavalkya says that she is a wife by marriage. Such a son, though living, is as good as dead, i.e. he does not possess all the rights and privileges of a son, and hence his name pārasava (pārāyaṇa eva savah). Kullūka allows śrāddha etc. for him. The Pārasavas have a pretty high antiquity.¹ "An inscription from Bengal, belonging to the seventh century, describes a certain individual as 'pāśava' and makes him the issue of a Brahmin father and a Śūdra mother, which is in conformity with rules of the sacred laws Bāna, in his Haishacharita, also tells us that his father, a Brahmin, had a Śūdra wife besides a Brahmin one, and describes her issue as his 'pāśava brothers'." In the Kerala province Pāśavas are known as Vāriyaras (also spelt, Warriar) who form a sub-section of the group of Ampalavāsīs (literally, temple-residents) whose hereditary occupation is temple service. The duties of the Vāriyaras are to sweep the temple premises, cleanse the temple-utensils, collect flowers and make garlands. They hold a rank below the Kṣatriyas in the social hierarchy of Kerala. They are believed to have had their origin in the union of Nampūtiri (Kerala) Brāhmanas with Nāyar women, and like the Nāyars they follow the matrimonial system of inheritance. The text of Candralekhā (I 5 4 etc.) makes a reference to their menial service in the temple, and perhaps hints that they were not duly respected in the society. Our author, however, would not like them to be condemned, because they render service to Brāhmanas, they are devoted to literary pursuit, and among them has been born Rudra, of pure character (suddha-vutta suhao). Pāśavas are renowned for Sanskrit scholarship in Kerala from very early times.

There is no doubt that Rudradāsa had worthy teachers in Rudra and Śrīkantha, the former definitely and the latter probably of the Pāśava community. Considering their association with Zamorins of Calicut, it appears that this Rudra is the same as the author of the commentary Bhaktapriyā on the Nāṭyaṇīyam (A. D. 1585) of Nāṭyana Bhattatiri (1560-1646 A. D.)² Further this Śrīkantha, it is likely, is the same as the author of the Prākṛit Kāvya, the Soracarita, in which he mentions Rudra as his fellow-student.³

Rudradāsa, like his teachers, enjoyed the patronage of the Zamorins of Calicut, and Mānaveda, whose marriage is celebrated in the Candralekhā, was his contemporary Zamorin. The Zamorins of Calicut were not only great warriors, but they were also great patrons of poets and philosophers. Every member of the royal family, prince and princess alike, took keen interest in Sanskrit learning, and some of them hold a high place in the history of Sanskrit literature in Kerala. Every year they convened a grand assembly of the learned, and extended patronage to scholars of outstanding talent and ability. Their generosity bestowed gifts not only on Brāhmanas but also on Vāriyars or Pāraśaras. In fact the hereditary tutor of the family was the Vāriyar of Desamangalam. It is on account of his commentary on the Nīāyanīyam that Rudra became a special favourite of the Zamorin Mānaveda (A.D. 1655-58), the author of Kṛṣṇa-nāṭaka. Mānaveda I showed great regard for Rudra by putting in his charge the education of his nephew and successor, Mānaveda II known as Aśvati Thiruna. From the asterism under which he was born, Mānaveda II came to the throne in A.D. 1658 and ruled for four years. He was a man of learning and a lover of the learned. In his court flourished the east coast poet generally called Cidambarekavi who extolled the glories of his patron in his play Lakṣmī Mānavedam. In all probability it is Mānaveda II who was the patron of our author Rudradasa and who figures as the hero in the Candalekhā. Thus possibly Rudradasa wrote the Candalekhā some time about 1660 A.D. No other work of his has come to light so far.

NOTES

Yavanikāntara I

4) b Looking now at the reading of c (1. e., the Calcutta ed. of a portion of Candralekhā published in the संस्कृतसाहित्यपरिषद् पत्रम्, February and March 1932) and in the light of the chāyā of k, we can even read दरभेरे म्हेरे = दरं स्थविरे स्मेरान्, see the corrupt chāyā of m. दरं or दर = ईषत् is not unknown to Sanskrit, दर being usually used in a compound. दरस्मितसमुल्लसद्वनकान्तिपूरामृतै etc in the गङ्गालहरी 49 In d पुण्णे may be better rendered as पुण्यान् holy — l. 2 रवम्भंसलो, कंसताल show spontaneous doubling of म and त — l. 3 ओअरण = अवतरण, waving of light? — l. 4 बहुल = बहुल, copious, thick — l. 6 वृत् and नद्ग are treated as synonyms by the छायाकार. 5) l. 3 Here the figure of speech is निदर्शना — l. 6 The मनुस्मृति explains the term पारशव thus. यं ब्राह्मणस्तु शूद्राया कामादुत्पादयेत्सुतम् । स पारयन्नेव शवस्तस्मात् पारशव. स्मृतः ॥ ९-१७८. Kullūka's commentary on it runs thus. 'विपक्षस्त्वेष विधिः स्मृतः' इति याज्ञवल्क्यदर्शनात्परिणीतायामेव शूद्राया ब्राह्मणः कामार्थं पुत्रं जनयेत् स जीवन्नेव शवतुल्य इति पारशव. स्मृतः । यद्यप्ययं पित्रुपकारार्थं श्राद्धादि करोत्येव तथाप्यसंपूर्णोपकारत्वाच्छव-व्यपदेशः ॥. 6) c A pun on the word वंश is implied, of तुहिनकिरणवंशस्थूलमुक्ताफलानां etc. चम्पुभारत I. 2; and thereon the commentary remarks. वेणुषु सौक्तिकोत्पत्तिर्लोकप्रसिद्धा । — l. 2 Can we have a danda after किल, and take तस्य कई = तस्य कृति? 7) l. 1 महप्पाण = महात्मभ्याम् 8) b सुहअ = सुभगम्, even सुखदम् 10) a Better read णव ति = नवा (कृति.) इति — c पम्हुसिअ = विस्मृत्य, cf. Hema. VIII. iv. 75 विस्सु पम्हुस-विम्हर-वीसरा । 11) a Or even अपरमाला, a garland made of any other flower. 12) l. 4 खंडपरसु = परशु, an epithet of Śiva.—महमहंत, cf. Hema. VIII. iv. 77-8 प्रसरे पयल्लोवेल्लौ । महमहो गन्धे । — l. 8 Rather संसद्अ = सशयित, the idea is that the sword (मण्डलाम्) in his hand created the illusion of a row of bees. 13) l. 1 जवनिकान्तर is quite usual in Sanskrit. यवनिकान्तर looks like hyper-Sanskritisation. — l. 6 Here is perhaps the only वि after an अनुस्वार, otherwise we have वि. 14) b Can it be that वित्तेहि = वृत्तै = वर्तितै, performed? — l. 1. Looking at 15 2, here also we may read सुरहि-समअ-समारंभ etc. — l. 3 Rather read छप्पअ-रिछोलि-लच्छीणं अच्छीण = षट्पदश्रेणिलक्ष्मीकयो. अक्षणो; and thus we have alliteration too 15) c तंबचूड-क्कोड, bosom or the chest of the cock from which starts its shrill note, c reads तम्मचूडक्कोडं बोलन्त .etc. 16) c फुल्ल = पुष्प, see verse I. 35 also. 17) l. 6 a reads सुहरविअ. — l. 7-8 The text uses both the terminations, इ and वि, quite indiscriminately. — l. 11 The chāyā is not quite satisfactory, it may be read thus मरकतराम' महाराजस्य मधुमासावतारवर्धिताम् आत्मनः समृद्धिम् अवतंसयितुमिव आचारं करोति i. e., the मरकतराम is observing hospitality (आचार) towards your Majesty as if in order to crown (अवतंसयितुमिव) its glory which is enhanced by the advent (अवतार) of spring.—l. 13 After this remark of the king, according to, there follows the passage I. 17. 23 to I. 18 (included) and thereafter comes I. 17. 15 to I. 17. 22.—l. 16 जहामिद्व = जहा + इद्व = यथेष्ट may be an illustration of Samdhi-consonant, see Pischel § 353 18) α पद्म-मालिख = पद्ममालिकम्, पद्मन् an eyelash, it also means a filament of flower.—l. 6 मुमञ्चले = भ्रुकुट्यञ्चले or भ्रुवञ्चले. 19) There is यतिभङ्ग in the last line. 21) b णोल्ल is connected with रुद् by Vararuci VIII. 7, but with क्षिप् by Hemacandra VIII. iv. 143. 22) c Perhaps there is a pun on the word सारस्वत meaning a stream, or the सारस्वत grammar, or even the worship of सरस्वती 23) b Should we read नालीख केलीधरा? 24) c सोरहेकणिलख = सौहृदैकनिलयम्? 26) l. 4 णिद्वाविख etc. = निधाप्य लोहशलाकया etc.—l. 12 ओलंबद्व = अवलम्बते, supports. 27) l. 16 तं = तत्?—l. 2 The figure of speech is निदर्शना—29) l. 6 This appears to be a well-known saying; compare Daśakumāra-carita, p. 76, l. 9 (Agashe's ed., B. The chāyā gives just a suitable rendering. 11) The sense is somewhat obscure. some words are used with a double meaning. 12) Two मात्रास are lacking in the third pāda; perhaps a word like मे or मह is required between अगं and उपपल. 13) a Rather read सुरही, and the first line may be explained thus The सुरभि (i. e., कामधेनु) bears the red अशोक (i. e., turns red through shame) at the sight of the king (who is superior to कामधेनु in point of benevolence); and the lovelorn (रक्ता) damsel too bears (suffers) sorrow (शोकं) at the sight of the king (whose love she has not yet won).—b मोह=मयूख as well as मोह.—c can there be a pun here also? जीवादो=i जीवात् 'from the bow-string', ii जीवात् 'from life', जीवात् निपतति 'falls from life' or 'dies', i. e., 'suffers death pangs'. 14) l. 1 संदम्भ-सरणी, the path of literary composition 15) c what is the wrong (विषमं) with her that we should know and speak out?—l. 6 Obviously विस्संभदा=विश्रम्भता is doubly abstract, or it may be rendered as विश्रम्भदस्थानम्. 20) l. 7 कवलिका=कवलिका, a piece of cloth over a sore or wound, a bandage; here it appears to signify something like a cloth-bag for books. 22) l. 1 गम=ग्राम means 'a number of notes, gamut'.—l. 2 गुण=virtue, as well as string—l. 3 Are we to read गणिज्जगुणे, Voc., qualifying विपंचिण? अमितगुणायाम् अस्याम् अनुरागयन्ती (=अनुरागं कुर्वती), attaching yourself to this lady possessed of innumerable गुणः (—also singing after this lady.).—l. 4 परिवादिनी=lute, as well as slanderer. 23) ll. 1-2 have a metrical ring here and there. 32) l. 7 अत्रगद्गे is to be understood with -वरिसाणं च. 33) l. 4 गिडुका=गिडुका, see Hema. rendered thus: 'That the two (i. e., the moon and the deer) should unite in friendship is in the fitness of things (because both of them are your enemies, being defeated by you), but that they (your vanquished foes) should move at large in your presence is a shameless affair on their part.' 24) a The reading बिम्बणेण

बिम्बं फले बिम्बिकाया प्रतिबिम्बे च मण्डले । विश्व —d Better 'होसि = भवसि for होसि;
the line then may be rendered thus: 'Pray tell me what righteous deeds have you performed in your former birth, so that you should be so (i. e., should have the pleasure of doing the aforesaid acts)?';
this reminds us of a line of Bhartṛhari: तन्मे ब्रूहि कुराज कुत्र भवता किं नाम तप्तं तप. ।

1) c सहीए = सख्या.—l. 1 विषुव is the equinoctial point. This play has the back-ground of the वसन्त season, and the author has specifically mentioned the चैत्रानिह (I. 24). So विषुवोत्सव is a festivity connected with a day when sun enters the vernal equinox, say about the 20th of March. Apparently the संवत्सर is चैत्रादि. During this festivity, it is suggested in the play, the imperial king holds

APPENDIX

REMARKS AND EXTRACTS ON SATTAKA AND NĀTIKĀ

The नाट्यशास्त्र of Bharata (XVIII. 2-3) does not mention सट्टक, nor is it specified in describing the Nāṭikā (XVIII. 58-60) —The अग्निपुराण, of uncertain date, mentions सट्टक (338. 2) as one of the various types of drama.—Neither the दशरूपक of धनंजय (10th century A. D.) nor its commentary by his contemporary धनिक makes any reference to सट्टक.

अभिनवगुप्त (close of the 10th century A. D.) refers, in his commentary on the नाट्यशास्त्र of भरत, to सट्टक more than once: उक्तव्याख्याने तु क्रोहलादिलक्षिततौटकसट्टकरासकादिसंग्रहः फलं नाटिकायाः उदाहरणत्वादिति । (नाट्यशास्त्र Vol. II, p. 407, G. O. S., LXVIII, Baroda 1934), and अत एव न दशसंख्याविभागार्थो येन सट्टकादीनां त्यागः स्यात् । (Ibid. p. 408). The description of नाटिका is given by him on p. 435, and is quoted below.

हेमचन्द्र (1089-1172 A. D.) refers to सट्टक in his काव्यानुशासनम् thus: पाठ्यं नाटकप्रकरणनाटिकासमवकारेहासृगडिमव्यायोगोत्सृष्टिकाङ्कप्रहसनभाणवीथीसट्टकादि । (८-३) तथा च नाटकादीनि वीध्यन्तानि वाक्यार्थाभिनयस्वभावानि भरतमुनिनोपदर्शितानि, सट्टकश्च कैश्चित् (p. 432, ed. R. C. Parikh, Bombay 1938), further on p. 444 we have a quotation विष्कम्भकप्रवेशकरहितो यस्त्वेकभाषया भवति । अप्राकृतसंस्कृतया स सट्टको नाटिका-प्रतिमः ॥ इति, and the विवेक commentary runs thus: सट्टके च नाटिकायामिव रतिफलं घृतं व्युत्पाद्यते । एवं नाटकादीनां स्वरूपं तत्फलं च दर्शितम् । तच्छरीरभूतसंघिसंध्यङ्गादिलक्षणविस्तरस्तु भरतादेवानुसृतः ।

रामचन्द्र and गुणचन्द्र (middle of the 12th century A. D.), the pupils of Hemacandra, do not include सट्टक in the 12 types of dramas described by them; but there is a casual remark in their commentary: कियतोऽपि लक्षणविधावभिप्रेतस्य, तेन क्रोहलप्रणीतलक्ष्माण साट्टकादयो न लक्ष्यन्ते । लक्षणीयबाहुल्येऽपि हि यावत्त्येव भागे लक्षयितुः श्रद्धा तावानेव लक्ष्यते । Specifying other रूपकः, there is a quotation like this on p. 213: विष्कम्भकप्रवेशकरहितो यस्त्वेकभाषया भवति । अप्राकृतसंस्कृतया स सट्टको नाटिकाप्रतिमः ॥ (नाट्यदर्पणम् I, pp 25-26, G.O.S. XLVIII, Baroda 1929).

The भावप्रकाशनम् (G. O. S., XLV, Baroda 1930) of Śārada-tanaya (c. 1175-1250 A. D.) refers to सट्टक which is considered to be one of the so-called उपरूपकः. It is interesting to note that in some places the reading सट्टक shows variant readings तोटक and नाटक (p 180, l. 12, p. 181, l. 1). In this context some extracts from the Introduction (pp 52-3) may be given here. "The systematic treatment of all the twenty kinds of Uparūpakas, however, is found only in the Bhāvaprakāśana. The list of seventeen Uparūpakas, as supplied by the Agnipurāṇa, cannot be considered as very early as the Purāṇa itself contains quotations from the Dhvanyāloka and displays remarkable similarity with the Bhoja's theory of Śīṅārāsa. Considering all these facts we can conclude for the present that these Uparūpakas were unknown when the Nāṭyaśāstra was composed, but originated before the time of Dhanika, and probably Kohala was responsible for inventing these Uparūpakas. Among the lists of Uparūpakas supplied by several writers beginning from Dhanika to Viśvanātha the heaviest is perhaps that of Śārādātanaya who mentions two lists each having twenty names (pp. 221, 8, 255, 1). But in the first list Saṭṭaka has an independent place while Bhāṇa is omitted and in the second list which seems to be more accurate Bhāṇa is mentioned instead of Saṭṭaka as the latter is included in the Nāṭikā." "Saṭṭaka also is mentioned here as a different form of Nāṭikā (p. 244, 15), but once again this subject is brought for discussion at the end of the section dealing with the Uparūpakas (p. 269, 1). Here following Bhoja Śārādātanaya gives the Saṭṭaka an independent place thereby increasing the number of Uparūpakas." The relevant passages may be given here. After the description of the नाटिका, we have the following lines on p. 244 सैव प्रवेशकेनापि निष्क्रमेण विना कृता । अङ्गस्थानीयविन्यस्तचतुर्यवनिकान्तरा । प्रकृष्ट-प्राकृतमयी सट्टकं नामतो भवेत् । In another context, after a remark ते नृत्यभेदाः प्रायेण संख्यया विंशतिर्भेदाः (p 255), the सट्टक is thus described on p 269 : सट्टकं नाटिकाभेदो नृत्यभेदात्मक भवेत् । कैशिकीभारतीयुक्तहीनरौद्रसादिकम् ॥ सर्वसधिविहीनं च नाटिकाप्रतिरूपकम् । शौरसेनमहाराष्ट्रवाच्य-भाषादिकल्पितम् ॥ अङ्गस्थानीयविच्छेदचतुर्यवनिकान्तरम् । छादनस्त्रलनभ्रान्तिनिवृत्तिदेरसम्भवात् ॥ न वदेत्प्राकृती भाषां राजेति कतिचिज्जगुः । मागध्या शौरसेन्या वा वदेद्वाजेति केचन ॥ नाटिकाप्रतिरूपं यद्विशेषो रूपकस्य तत् । सट्टकं तेन तस्याहुर्भाषां तां प्राकृतीं परे ॥ राजशेखरकृतं तद्यथा कर्पूरमञ्जरी ।

The नाटकलक्षणरत्नकोश (ed. Dillon, London 1937) of Sāgarānandin (c. 13th century A. D.) describes सट्टक thus on p 133 अथ सट्टकम् । तच्च नाटिका-[pp. 113-4] प्रतिरूपकम् । कैशिकी-भारतीप्रधानम् । रौद्रवीरभयानक-बीभत्समवमर्शसंधिशून्यम् । यथा कर्पूरमञ्जरी । अन्तर्यमनिकान्तम् । यथाङ्गे यमनिकयावच्छेदा भवन्ति तथात्रापि । शौरसेनीप्राच्यामहाराष्ट्रीयुक्तम् । लीवद्राज्ञोऽपि प्राकृतपाठः । यद्यपि बादरायणप्रभृतिभिरुक्तं राज्ञ-संस्कृतपाठः कार्योत् प्राकृतपाठः । तत्र रूपकमेवेदं कार्यमिति राज्ञापि प्राकृतपाठः कर्तव्यः । In another context (p. 90), about the language of the सट्टक, there is a remark: सट्टके लीप्रधानत्वाद्व्यपकस्यानुरोधतः । नृप लीवत्पठेदेष पाठस्य नियतो विधिः ॥

The प्रतापरुद्रयशोभूषण (ed. K. P. Trivedi, Bombay 1909) of विद्यानाथ (1st quarter of the 14th century A. D.) mentions ten रूपक in which सट्टक is not given any place; so the commentary रत्नापण remarks thus on p. 101. दश रूपकाणीति । नाटिकाराट्टकादीनामत्रैवान्तर्भावदिति भाव । तत्प्रकारस्तु दशरूपके द्रष्टव्यः ।

The साहित्यदर्पण (ed P V Kane, Bombay 1923) of Visvanātha (between 1300-1384 A. D.) includes सट्टक in the list of 18 उपरूपक (VI. 4-6), and it is described thus (VI. 276-7). अथ सट्टकम् । सट्टकं प्राकृताशेषपाठ्यं स्यादप्रवेशकम् । न च विष्कम्भकोऽत्र प्रचुरश्चाद्भुतो रसः ॥ अका जवनिकाख्याः स्युः स्यादन्यनाटिकासमम् । यथा कर्पूरमञ्जरी ॥

The definition of नाटिका is thus given by the नाट्यशास्त्र (XVIII. 58-61). प्रकरणनाटकमेवादुत्पाद्यं वस्तु नायकं नृपतिम् । अन्तःपुरसंगीतकन्यामधिकृत्य कर्तव्या ॥ स्त्रीप्राया चतुरङ्गा ललिताभिनयात्मिका सुविहिताङ्गी । बहुचतुर्गतीपाठ्या रतिसभोगात्मिका चैव ॥ राजोपचार- (v. l. कामोपचार-) युक्ता । प्रसादनक्रोधदम्भ- (v. l. शृङ्गाराभिनयभाव-) संयुक्ता । नायकदेवीद्विती- सपरिजना नाटिका ज्ञेया ॥ [अन्तर्भावगता श्लेषा भावयोरुभयोर्यतः । अत एव दशैतानि रूपाणीत्युदितानि वै ॥]. The दशरूपक (III. 43-48) defines Nāṭikā thus: लक्ष्यते नाटिकाप्यत्र संकीर्णान्यनिवृत्तये । तत्र वस्तु प्रकरणाजाटकाचार्यो नृप ॥ प्रख्यातो वीरललितः शृङ्गारोऽङ्गी सल- क्षणः । स्त्रीप्रायचतुरङ्गादिभेदकं यदि चेप्यते ॥ एतद्विष्णुपञ्चपात्रादिभेदेनानन्तरूपता । देवी तत्र अव्ययेष्टा प्रगल्भा नृपवंशजा ॥ यम्भीरा मानिनी कृच्छ्रात्तद्वशाज्जेतुसंगमः । नायिका तादृशी मुग्धा दिव्या चातिभनोहरा ॥ अन्तःपुरादिसंबन्धादासजा श्रुतिदर्शनैः । अनुरागो नवावस्थो नेतुस्तस्यां यथोत्तरम् ॥ नेता तत्र प्रवर्तत देवी-

प्रासेन शक्ति । कैशियज्ञैश्चतुर्भिश्च युक्ताङ्कैरिव नाटिका ॥ My friend Dr. A. M. Ghatage expects the reading एकद्वित्र्यङ्गपञ्चादि etc, and thus he would remove the possibility of variation in the number of the acts of a Nāṭikā.

The साहित्यदर्पण describes नाटिका thus (VI. 269-72) नाटिका कृत्वृत्ता स्यात्स्त्रीप्राया चतुरङ्गिका । प्रख्यातो धीरललितस्तत्र स्यान्नायको नृप ॥ स्यादन्त पुरसबद्धा सगीत-व्याधृताथवा । नवानुरागा कन्यात्र नायिका नृपवंशजा ॥ सप्रवर्तते नेतास्या देव्यान्नासेन शक्ति । देवी पुनर्भवेज्येष्ठा प्रगल्भा नृपवंशजा ॥ पदे पदे मानवती तद्वश सगमो द्वयो । वृत्ति स्यात्केसिकी स्वल्पविमर्शा संधय पुन ॥

Turning to Sattakas themselves, Rājasekhara (c 900 A. D) uses the term more than once in his कर्पूष्मजरी (ed. Konow, Cambridge, Mass. 1901). सट्ठ अणचिद्वन् । (p. 4), कधिद जेव छइछेहिं । सो सट्ठो ति भण्णइ दूर जो णाडिआइ अणुहरइ । किं उण पवेसविक्खंभंकाइ केवलं ण दीसति ॥ (विचिन्त्य) ता कि ति सट्ठदं परिहरिअ पाउदबंधे पउत्तो कई । (p. p 4-5); चंडवालधरणीहरिणंको चक्कवट्टिअलाहणिमित्तं । एत्थ सट्ठअवरे रससोत्ते कुंतलाहिवसुअ परिणेइ ॥. The chāyā gives साटक as its Sanskrit equivalent and even शाटक is used by the MS of शृङ्गारमजरी The commentators quote a definition of Sudhākara सैव प्रवेशकेनापि विष्कम्भेण विना कृता । अङ्गस्थानीय-विन्यस्तचतुर्जवनिकान्तरा ॥ प्रकृष्टप्राकृतमयी सट्ठकं नामतो भवेत् ।

The following casual references to सट्ठक in the रत्नमञ्जरी (Bombay 1889), besides the verse quoted in the Intro, may be noted here. सट्ठकं माध्रिय (p 8); नट-ता कि पयोजणविसेस पडिवज्जिय एस सट्ठयप्पबधबंधप्पारभो । (p. 10); the word is used in two more places where the passages require slight emendation as shown in square brackets. शार्दूलविक्रीडित [विक्रीडितं] सट्ठक (v. 7 शाटा)-बन्धमधिकृत्य । (p. 7), and सदेससट्ठय [सदेस-पट्ठयं] दाइय etc. (p. 33).

What Rudradāsa has to say about Sattaka, we get at चदलेहा I. 4. 10-5. 1.

Further I could spot some remarks about Sattaka in the आनन्दसुन्दरी of घनश्याम (middle of the 18th century A. D) अत्थि एत्थ आणंदसुन्दरीणामहेअं तारिक्खं सट्ठअ तं जेव्व इमास्सि महासमाए जोगं । वि०-पाउडं खु त सव्वं । सू०- अदो जेव्व सट्ठअ ति भणिज्जइ । वि०-को णु खु तस्स कई । सू०-को अण्णो पुराअणकईण वि दुक्करम्मि सरस्सईभासाणिबंधणम्मि राअसेहरकइणो पर णिउणो । वि०-अवि सो महरट्ठचूडामणी घणस्सामकई । (B. O. R. I., ms. p. 2). On this passage the commentator Bhattanātha remarks thus: अनेन सर्वप्राकृतं सट्ठकमिति स्पष्टमुक्तं भवति । तथा चाहुराचार्या । सैव प्रवेशेन विना विष्कम्भेण विना कृता । अङ्गस्थानीयविन्यस्तचतुर्जवनिकान्तरा ॥ प्रकृष्टप्राकृतमयी सट्ठकं नामनामतः । सैव नाटिकेवेत्यर्थ इति ।

Turning to epigraphic records, the Barhut Inscriptions (c 200 B. C.) have a line like this: साटिक-संमदं तुरं देवान् । and it accompanies bas-relief which represents a dancing scene. Some read it sādika, sādikaśa. It is translated thus 'The jovial ravishing music of the gods, joyous with dancing'. Barua and Sinha have a note on it thus "Hoeinle No 14-translates 'Music of the gods, gay with dancing' Sādika may be taken to be a somewhat irregularly formed equivalent of Sk Sārika, a kind of dramatic performance, applicable to the dancing of apsarasas. Sk Sārika means gambling with dice (Tawney). Sammada is both an adjective 'gay' and a substantive 'gaily'. Here it forms a compound with sādika. Turam=tūryam, musical instrument, music. It is also likely that the three words sādika, sammada and tura refer respectively to three groups of dancers, singers, and players on instruments as seen in the amusement-scene below which the label stands. Hultzsch [refs. omitted] translates 'the music of the gods, which gladdens by (i. e., accompanied with) acting', Sāṭaka, a nāṭaka-bheda (Bharata-Nāṭya-Śāstra)". (See Barhut Inscriptions, p. 48, Calcutta 1926).

Select Opinions and Reviews

Dr. S. K. CHATTERJI, The University of Calcutta, Calcutta. 'It is really magnum opus for which any scholar may feel proud. The learned introduction is a model of what such an introduction should be. Your extensive learning and your prodigious industry both elicit unstinted admiration, the subsection on the language of the text is a very valuable addition to our positive knowledge of Sanskrit, Prākṛit (and Bhasha) philology.'

The Adyar Library Bulletin 'as a source of information on social conditions, religious history, cultural elements, linguistic data, historical and geographical side-lights etc., the work is indeed valuable and would pay amply a detailed study, and for such a study, Dr. Upadhye has already contributed much in his critical apparatus in this volume' (V. RAGHAVAN)

Journal of the University of Bombay 'His [i.e. Dr. Upadhye's] erudition and his knowledge of the editorial technique coupled with the speed with which he works are the things, very rare and most covetable. The Editor has adorned the work with a brilliant and an exhaustive Introduction in which he has discussed with a scholarly grasp all possible aspects relating to the work'. (A. S. GOPANI)

Indian Historical Quarterly. 'In a long Introduction the learned editor, besides drawing attention to the critical apparatus and the method followed in the presentation of the text, gives a comprehensive account of the narrative tale in old Indian literature with special reference to the literature of the Jains which can boast of a rich store of this material' (C. CHAKRAVARTI)
